SCRATCH IT OUT.

Brother McCrary's Recipe for Editing Mince Pies.

THE DEMON RUM SEDUCED HIS SHEARS

Taking Care of the Sins of Our Neighbors—Measuring Jokes by Inches—Corwin's Bomb.

I offer my sincere sympathy to Brother McCrary of the California Christian Advocate, for the recent mishap into which he was betrayed by the vagrom shears. It appears that this unsanctified shears, albeit accustomed to the editing of a religious paper, laid violent suppers on a recipe for the making of mince pie in which the Demon Rum had a finger. In brief, Brother McCrary—wretched man—recommended his astonished constituency to put brandy in their mince pies. Of course remonstrances poured in sufficient to fill a bushel basket, and what could he do, poor thing, but blame the miserable scissors. "Peccavi (I have sinned)" he cries, "but I did not mean to do it." If he had read the recipe before it was printed in his paper he would have "scratched out the brandy." He would not himself eat brandy for the world, and, indeed, I think he might be trusted to bring out a highly moral cookery book which would be a means of grace, with the brandy scratched. Yet it will not be safe for the brother to trust himself too much with that backsliding scissors. When it gets weary of editing it might ask him out to take a drink.

I observe with pleasure that this plan of scratching out the brandy is gaining a very wide acceptance. Thus, not very long ago, it was noticed that in a little manual of social etiquette, got out by Funk & Wagnalls, the publishers of The Voice, directions were given concerning the usages of drinking wine in company. In a work got out by such ardent prohibitionists this was considered unbecoming, and the remonstrances grew loud and prayerful. The publishers tried to repudiate the responsibility. They had not written the wicked book. Like Brother McCrary, they had not in fact read it. They were not to blame for the depravity of cold type, and they had not realized the dangers of editing their publications with a broom. It would not do. The feeling grew too strong, and they felt compelled to withdraw the edition. The next edition will appear with the brandy scratched out.

I am myself a strong advocate of careful editing on a high moral plane, and in a good cause the facts may be very safely and judiciously avoided. It is not allowable to speak of the Demon Rum, save in the way of anger, and it would be a great comfort to me if somebody would induce Sister Negus to change her exceedingly unfortunate name.

A stern discipline and rigid supervision must be maintained. Thus the poet of the Salvation Army puts into rhyme the psalm which begins, "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept when we remembered Zion. We hanged our harps," etc. Here is his version, and mark the spelling and the grammar:

By the waters of Babel, we sot ourselis down,
We sot ourselis down for to droy:
And as for our 'arps they was wringing o' wet.
So we 'ung 'em on trees for to droy.
An' them as had copt us, they asked us to sing
The songs of our country, so dear.
How the dence can we sing the Lord's songs, says we,
In a blooming rum place like this 'ere.

Here is a fervent and exalted spirit, only marred by the unhappy allusion to rum in the last line. I venture to say that Brother McCrary would not, after the lesson he has received, dare to print these verses except with the rum scratched out.

The growth of this spirit of supervision of the sins of our neighbors is very cheering. For instance, some time ago when the Pan American delegates visited Washington it was stated in the press that Mrs. Harrison had treated them to p——nch. It is true that as a matter of fact she had nothing of the sort, but, nevertheless, the responsibility of the thing she had not done was very widely felt. Mrs. Harrison got cardloads of letters, of which this is a type:

"Can it be possible that the contents of this slip of paper be true? I cut it out of a little paper named the Journal. I could not bring myself to think it is true! But if it be, then! Oh, Mrs. Harrison, stop and think what an awful mistake you have made by putting the bottle to your neighbors' mouths; just to think that you, with your honored husband, were placed at the head of our nation. For what purpose? Was it, oh, was it to deal out death and damnation to your fellow beings, who, with yourself, were created in the image of God?

"Alas, I feel as if the name of Harrison is polluted. If had a dear brother of that name who would have died for the cause of temperance. I am glad he is not alive to know that such an awful, disgraceful act took place in the executive mansion!!!"

The lady—I assume it is a lady—is her sister's keeper, an absolute policewoman. Her brother is dead, and she is glad, lest his eye be offended by his sister's sin. This is the spirit of Torquemada translated into petticoats.

In the same line of police duty is a column published weekly in The Voice in which is summarized and measured what the religious press of the preceding week had to say about Prohibition. I select from the catalogue:

Dayton (O.) Religious Telescope (United Brethren.)—Editorially, 19 inches (5 items), one reference in an article on how churches lose their grip on the boys by paying no attention to moral questions; one note on "Rum in Africa;" one on Judge Brewer, disapproving the appointment, another on the whisky trust's favoring the revenue tax, another on Christmas drunken brawls. Temperance column, 17 inches, an article on "North Dakota Prohibition," giving the features of the new law; another on the "Crusade Anniversary;" another on "High License, showing its utter failure in Bloomington, Ill.; in all, 32 inches.

The Religious Telescope appears to have done very well when compared with a Virginia paper, which, indeed, may have been the serpent which seduced Brother McCrary's scissors. Judge:

Richmond (Va.) Christian Advocate (Methodist Episcopal, South).—Nothing but a recipe for mince pies, to be made with "cider or wine."

In the summary of the doings of the Congregationalist we find the item "California Judge got drunk and fined himself," but he was boiled down to an inch and a half, including the moral lesson: rather short measure for so meaty an incident and proper to be set over against this credit to the Independent "item in the funny column on The Voice, ½ inch." Imagine a man solemnly writing down credits for good temperance literature: "Item, a joke on myself, ½ inch; item, a joke on Alleck Laidlaw, 1½ inches," and compelling us to the conclusion that the latter was the better joke by at least an inch:

It would seem that the sense of humor is dying out, if it ever existed, among these excellent people. They tell a good story of John A. Corwin, the erratic brother of Tom. He lived at Urbana, O., and might have been a greater man than his famous brother had not his passion for strong drink enslaved him. He would go on tremendous sprees and then swear off and do penance. Once in one of these spells of penitential sobriety he engaged with the temperance agitators of Urbana to deliver an address on the subject of total abstinence. But before the date fixed upon had arrived the judge was overtaken by his fell pursuer and began a spree. It happened, however, that the temperance people did not learn of this, so the arrangements for the meeting proceeded. The largest auditorium in the city—a church building—was chosen, because it was known that Judge Corwin would draw a very large audience. And so he did. The church was filled with expectant people.

When the judge strode down the aisle there was a rustling of fabrics and a craning of necks. Everybody looked at him, but nobody guessed the condition he was in. There is a degree of intoxication that adds the appearance of grave dignity even to a gravely dignified man. Judge Corwin had reached that degree. Ascending the pulpit stairs he laid his hat upon a chair and, without removing his overcoat, faced the audience, placed his hand upon the big Bible and said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: Ever since I first read in this holy book the story of the universal deluge I have been averse to drinking water; it is so full of sinners."

The audience looked as if it had been shocked by an earthquake. Nobody knew what this speech portended. Everybody was dumfounded.

"I have devoted much time and careful study to this book of divine inspiration," continued the speaker, "and I find that in the entire 4000 years of history which it covers mention is made of but one man who ever called for water. His name was Dives," said the Judge, taking up his hat, "and he was in h—l, where he ought to be."

Why George Law Lost the Game.
Washington Post.

General Spinola regaled his friends with a good poker story the other day: "I was coming down the Hudson one night," he said, "in company with Cornelius Vanderbilt, Thurlow Weed, Dean Richmond and George Law, when Weed proposed a game of poker and I was asked to come in. I hesitated, for I had only about $4000 in my pocket, and I knew that it was to be a game without a limit, I mentioned the state of my finance to Law, but he told me to take a hand, saying that he would back me to any amount. 'I am willing to lose $30,000 or $40,000 tonight,' he said, 'and tomorrow I will tell you my reason.' So the game started and I staid in, hugging the shore pretty close and getting startled every once in a while when some one went $1000 blind. When we quit at daybreak I had won about $4000, but Law had lost ten times that amount. The next day I met him. 'I will tell you, Frank,' he said, 'why I lost that money. I wanted Vanderbilt to think I was a sucker, and so I played like one. The result was that today I sold him a lot of steamboats for nearly $600,000 more than I ever expected to get from him. Don't you think the money was well invested?'"

Encouragement to the Industry.
Atlanta Constitution.

A female book agent had extraordinary luck at Abbeyville, Miss., recently. She was a sweet and chipper spinstor of 25, and he a lovable old man of 82. She tried in her artless way to sell him a book, but he had no heart for books while she was around. He had $250,000, however, to leave to a wife, and asked her to become a candidate for that office. After some consideration she consented to allow the use of her name, and he elected her forthwith and agreed to leave his $250,000 to her when he died. The old gentleman's name is Allen McDonald, and the charming book agent's late appellation was Miss Addie D. Bowen. She is now Mrs. McDonald and has become the old man's darling.

INFLUENZA.

Historical Sketch of Remarkable Epidemics

DURING THE PAST THREE CENTURIES.

First Appearance in America—Mortality — Influence of Climate — Origin of Name.

Influenza is no new disease. From the earliest date we find mention of it in medical literature to the present time embraces a period of more than 2200 years.

The eminent Greek physician Hippocrates mentioned it in his works written nearly 400 years B. C.

The first widespread epidemic of the disease seems to have occurred in Italy about 800 A. D. At this time the victorious army of Charlemagne returning from Italy fell a victim to it, and was so weakened as to be unfit for service.

The term "influenza" is of Italian origin. Of all epidemic diseases this is the most universal. The Italian physicians, considering the rapidity of its march and the extent of its range over land and sea, its occurrence in both hemispheres, in different climates, and in opposite seasons, in all varieties of weather, and among all classes of people, were led to the supposition that some extraordinary influence—Italian influenzia—hence the origin of the term—could alone give rise to so widespread a malady. Because of its sudden onset the French designate the disease la grippe.

The first systematic medical description of the disease was written in 1510. At this time it prevailed as a severe epidemic and traveled in a northwesterly direction from the island of Sicily over western Europe.

Forty-seven years later the disease broke out in Asia, flashed westward, and in a few days brought down the greater portion of Europe. From the rapidity of its advance the influenza of this period has been called "lightning catarrh."

A medical author of that time says: "Before the beginning of autumn, 1557, it attacked all parts of Spain at once, so that the greater part of the population of that kingdom was seized with it almost on the same day." This epidemic was very malignant, more than 2000 dying in Madrid in the month of September. In 1580 the disease again ravaged Europe, having its origin in Sicily, as once before.

It is a fact worthy of note, that after the disease had spent its force the plague became prevalent; and in those countries where influenza had been most violent, the plague proved most fatal.

There are records of an epidemic of this disease originating in Germany and extending southward to the island of Malta, where it was. Likewise, followed by the plague.

The influenza of 1732-33, as described in the "Edinburgh Medical Essays" of the same date, began in Germany, swept over Europe, across the Atlantic, to America. This is the earliest authentic record we have of the disease in this country.

Characteristic of this epidemic was that it affected not only the mucous membrane of the respiratory tract, but simultaneously that of the alimentary canal, and hence was more than ordinarily fatal. Some writers place the first appearance of the disease in this country at an earlier date, 1658. However, I can find no reliable record of such.

In but one instance, 1761, did influenza take its origin in America, at which time it was of more than the usual severity.

It became prevalent here during the months of November and December, soon directed its course across the ocean and appeared in Germany during the following February and March, visited London in April, and France in July. It returned to America in a mild form during October. Paris was spared by the epidemic of this period, yet it raged with great intensity in the adjacent territory. In many parts of England it was followed by epidemic dysentery with fearful mortality.

Other epidemics of influenza involving the greater part of Europe and America, and in a few instances Asia, occurred in 1775, 1780-82, 1830-32, 1847. Several times, in different parts of Europe, the disease has proved itself a heralder of epidemic dysentery and cholera.

The duration of influenza in any one locality seldom exceeds six weeks. Upon the whole, few deaths result from uncomplicated cases.

The victims are found chiefly among the aged and the very young and among those suffering from pulmonary disorders.

There are a few epidemics, however, which have proved very fatal. It has been estimated that in Dublin alone 4000 people died from the influenza of 1832.

Among the phenomena relating to weather, which seem to have a connection with influenza either as a percursor, or attendant upon the disease, we may note great vicissitude—cold weather rapidly followed by warm, wet by dry, foggy by clear. Yet there has not been a uniform connection between any condition of the atmosphere as to heat or cold, rain or drought, wind or calm, and the prevalence of this disease after it has had its origin, for in different places it has maintained itself under the dominion of every variety of weather. This fact led scientists to look more closely for a cause of the disease. The microscope was brought to their assistance. The secretion from the mucous membrane during an epidemic was closely examined and a germ found there, hence the "germ theory" of its cause. However, the finding of a germ does not prove the "germ theory." To produce the disease from the germ is necessary. This has not been done. Moreover, the microscope will reveal a germ in the nasal secretions during a simple cold in the head. Yet it is not more the finding of a germ than the epidemic nature of influenza that has led the followers of Koch to advocate the "germ theory."

Is the disease contagious? By this is meant, is the disease one which is caught from another person by contact, by the breath, or by any emenations from the body, etc. Influenza like many other epidemic diseases, has given physicians occasion to entertain very opposite views on this question. If we draw an inference from the recorded statements of the majority of medical observers, we would undoubtedly pronounce it non-contagious. However, we cannot appeal to a majority to decide a disputed question in science. While there are a few instances in which influenza seems to have been propagated by contagious transmission, yet there are a far greater number of cases cited which tend to establish a contrary opinion. The following is the oldest and most popular theory regarding its cause and epidemic nature. The disease is an infectious one; it depends upon a subtle poison which originates, or at least subsists, in the atmosphere, is progressive in its movements and depends upon peculiar atmospheric changes.

Those who advocate the "germ theory" are most strong in advancing its contagious nature. There is a third class who straddle the fence and make the disease both contagious and infectious.

The following fact seems conclusive evidence as to the operation of some general cause: During the epidemic of 1782 in Europe two fleets left the coast of England about the same time, bound for different points of destination. Neither fleet had communication with any shore or vessel after setting sail. The crews of each were free from all contagious influences before sailing. Yet about four months after leaving port a severe epidemic of influenza broke out nearly simultaneously in both fleets, making them the best example of a floating hospital on record.

Epidemic influenza as a rule is most virulent at its outbreak, and diminishes in intensity with time and extension; hence it proves itself most fatal to those people among whom it originates.

We can scarcely look over the history of influenza without noticing a connection between it and morbid affections of the mucous surfaces of the alimentary canal as sequelæ. Gastric catarrh, cholera, dysentery, and diarrhœa too frequently follow the disease to some extent, whenever it exists at all severe.

Influenza is to be differentiated from simple catarrh of the respiratory organs by its epidemic nature, sudden onset, prolonged chilly stage, higher fever, greater pain and fullness in the forehead, pain in the back and muscles and greater prostration.

The symptoms and treatment have already been given to the public through the columns of THE TRIBUNE, hence would be unin eresting at this writing. S. H. BUTEAU, M. D.

IMPRESSING THE FORRIGNER.

How a Party of Savages From Senegal Was Entertained.
New York Sun.

The French unders and the art of impressing the savage mind with the grandeur of the white man. A lot of unsophisticated chiefs who had been France's enemies, and might be again, visited Kayes, on the river Senegal, a while ago and saw all the wonders the French could show them in a day. They were first marshaled on the river bank and scared nearly out of their wits by the explosion of dynamite under water. The dead fish that came to the surface were cooked for the dinner of the visitors, but they declined to eat anything that had been killed by fetich. Then an instantaneous photograph of the crowd, taken when they were looking at everything except the deadly camera, aroused much wonderment, which grew hugely when a man with a multi-charge gun scattered bullets around like hailstones, and made the flintlocks of the visitors appear very mean.

Of course there was the usual review of troops, and dazzling fireworks in the evening, but the greatest wonder of all was the talking machine, as they called the telephone. It was strange enough that this little box could talk French to them, but when they found that it was also perfectly familiar with their own language, by general consent they declared the talking machine the biggest thing the whites had done yet.

An amusing spectacle in the form of a clerk asleep in a show window in the toy department of A. J. Wiener's store on I street attracted the attention of many pedestrians yesterday. The young man had attended a dance the night previous, and shortly after arriving at the store the next morning was instructed to clean out the show window, wash the glass, and put in a new display of goods.

He started to do as instructed, and after drawing a wet sponge across the glass a few times fell asleep. He was allowed to remain in this condition for nearly an hour, when the large crowd that had assembled becoming too noisy the sleeper was awakened.

The clerk now enjoys the distinction of having drawn the largest crowd in one day for his employer than all the other clerks combined.

BIG HANDS.

Of the Sort That Are Dealt, But Not Often.

CARDS ON WHICH FORTUNES TURNED.

Great Games in Which Vanderbilt, John T. Raymond, and Roland Reed Figured.

Cards have played peculiar freaks on many occasions, and the story of the remarkable whist hands held at a table in a Philadelphia clubhouse recently, when each player held a full suit, would seem incredible were it not for the well known reputation and standing of the four gentlemen. The cards had been thoroughly shuffled, but thirteen diamonds went to the dealer, and each of the other players held thirteen cards of one suit. Although the stories of great hands seem almost impossible of belief, says the New York Star, it must always be remembered that the possibilities for great surprises are absolutely innumerable, as a computation of the changes which can be developed will readily show. Card stories, like fish stories, are very prolific, but there are many wonderful experiences of players that are well authenticated.

In connection with whist, a funny incident happened about a year ago to a well known gentleman of this city who is a worshiper of Hoyle. He delights in telling his friends that on one particular occasion he held the thirteen trumps, and yet took only one trick. His opponent to his left took a deuce; his partner played the ace, and when it came to his turn he promptly trumped. His partner, disgusted at such a play, threw his hand out of the window and ended the game.

Poker is perhaps the game where complications and possibilities turn up most frequently, and stories of phenomenal hands are without number. In a club in this city a short time ago a series of surprising hands developed in a most startling manner. All the gentlemen are well known, and the story is absolutely true. A doctor opened a jack-pot with a pair of queens; the player to his right, with a pat king full, raised; the next man, with three sevens, raised again; the fourth player saw the raises, and so did the doctor, who was dealing. The two big hands, however, kept on raising, and the two victims, as they thought, stayed in from absolute necessity. On the draw the doctor drew to his pair and got two more queens and an ace. He had thrown a king away, so that he could not have four kings or four aces against him. When the betting began dollars flew into the pot, and everybody raised everybody else all round until the full hand got tired; the four sevens gave up and the betting was left to the dealer and the fourth man, who had drawn one card. At last, from sheer weariness, the doctor said: "Oh, I won't rob you any more. I have four queens," at the same time reaching for the pot. "Wait a bit," said the quiet player. "I have a straight flush," and he laid down the two, three, four, five and six of spades. These were four big hands, indeed.

Roland Reed, the popular actor, is also the hero of many wonderful poker stories. He is fond of telling how on one occasion on a railway train, with four playing, he won several hundred dollars with four aces against four jacks and a pat flush. On another occasion at Boston, with Charlie Reed, Fred Hawley, and Allan Dale in the game, there were three pat flushes to sweeten the pot before the draw, and a quiet individual in the corner, who had stayed in out of sheer desperation with a pair of deuces, eventually corralled the wealth by drawing two more.

The late John T. Raymond, who was an enthusiast in all games of chance, was playing in a small town in the far West about ten years ago, when poker was a craze. He whiled away the afternoon by having a small unlimited game with a gambler who was noted for his skill and pluck. After playing without incident for hours, John suddenly struck four aces, and his opponent four kings. After staking all he was worth, Raymond excused himself to his friend, rushed across to the bank, and, showing his hand to the cashier, who was also a great poker player, said excitedly: "How much shall I stake?" "Here, take $20,000," said the cashier (who is doubtless now in Canada). John did so, rushed back, and soon afterward divided $15,000 winnings with his friend.

After such monster hands as these a return to a lower level will perhaps be refreshing. Bluffing is considered an art in poker, and has won many thousands of dollars. In 1861 Cornelius Vanderbilt sat down in a game of "freeze out" with a well known gambler, who had only $800. After a few hands Vanderbilt raised the pot $2000. "You cannot do it," said the gambler, nervously. "I have only $600. "Well, $600 I go you," replied the millionaire. "I see you," said the gambler. Vanderbilt had a pair of deuces, and his opponent a pair of trays.

And last, but certainly not least, in a well known gambling house on Twenty-seventh street, New York, two hands are nailed up over the mantels. They are the six, seven, eight, nine, and ten of diamonds, and the same in spades. These two hands came together, and caused the division of a small fortune between the holders.

GAME KILLED IN SCOTLAND.

Two and One-Half Million Pounds Every Season.
Glasgow Herald.

During the present shooting season it has been estimated that in all probability as many as half a million grouse and black-game will be killed and sent to market, each bird (blackcock, greyhen and grouse), weighing on the average two pounds, which gives us 1,000,000 pounds of food as the product (chiefly) of the vast heather areas of Scotland. Even at the price of two shillings per pound the sum represented will amount to £100,000, which, large as it is, is far below the amount of money annually expended in shooting rents and in other ways by the tenants of the moors, of whom it has been said that every brace of grouse they kill costs them a sovereign. Estimates of the number of partridges killed are somewhat difficult to form, as the land which provides the birds is not, like the grouse moors, separately held and rented. In Great Britain, taking the average of recent shooting seasons as a guide, it may be assumed that 400,000 partridges will be shot, and counting them overhead at the modest price of 1s. each, the money value represented will touch £30,000. A clue to the pheasant supply is less difficult to obtain, on account of the fact that the bird is extensively bred on what may be called "artificial lines;" in other words, tens of thousands of pheasants are hatched every year by barn-door fowls, the eggs being purchased from persons who make it their business to supply them in large quantities, having aviaries for the purpose. On some estates there is also a very great number of wild birds which, being carefully watched during the breeding season, yield a considerable crop of chicks. Taking it for granted, therefore, that half a million of these birds are annually consumed, at a cost of 2s. 6d. each, the total sum expended will amount to £62,500, and it is not too much to say that those who supply the birds will sell them to the wholesale dealers at considerably less than they cost. To rear each pheasant that comes to the gun, it has been calculated, involves an expenditure in food and wages of a little less than 3s. Summing up these figures, we have 500,000 grouse and black game of about the average weight of two pounds each; also 400,000 partridges, weighing each close one pound. Every one of the half million pheasants will weigh not less overhead than two pounds. So these birds supply us with 2,400,000 pounds of good wholesome food every season, the breeding and purveying of which give employment to large bodies of the people at fair wages. When the million of rabbits and hares annually consumed are added, the totals of both weight and value become, of course, much increased. These animals have, happily, this season been killed in larger number than usual.

agacity of a Coyote.
Virginia, Nev., Chronicle.

Residents in the vicinity of the Philadelphia Brewery have been robbed of above 500 chickens in the past few weeks, and until recently were unable to ascertain the identity of the thieves. A watch was set, and it was discovered that they were coyotes. The full grown animals could not get into the chicken house, but detailed their cubs to crawl through the holes left for chickens to enter. Once inside the cubs killed the chickens and pushed them through the holes to the full grown coyotes waiting on the outside, who bore them away to their rendezvous in the adjacent hills and ravines in that vicinity, which are swarming with these animals, and at night the air is vocal with their howls, the treble cries of the cubs forming a strange accompaniment to the deep bass of the elder contingent.

"SHOOT ME."

The Words Used by Jeff Davis When Captured.

HE WORE A GOWN AND A BIG BONNET,

And the Soldiers Thought He Was an Old Woman—Cavalry Boots Under the Gown.

There is at least one man in this city who is reading of the dangerous illness of Jefferson Davis with peculiar interest, says the Pittsburg correspondent of the Globe-Democrat. His name is T. J. Lane, and he is a conductor on the Fifth avenue traction line. Mr. Lane is the man who first laid hands on Davis when he was captured in Georgia while trying to escape after the surrender of Lee. The capture was made by a remnant of the second brigade of Second Division, composed of the Fourth United States Cavalry and the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry. Lane was a sergeant of Company M of the latter regiment, and he and two members of the Fourth Michigan were in advance of the body of troops. They discovered a female coming toward them, supporting a person who appeared to be an aged woman. This person was attired in a man's dressing gown and wore a big sunbonnet, which completely concealed the face. When the soldiers reached the pair the woman announced the person in the gown as her mother, and said she was taking her over the hill, where she could get a drink of spring water. As the twain made a step to continue their journey the gown, which had not been fastened at the bottom, [illegible] fully and revealed to the soldiers a pair of cavalry boots. One of the Michigan men immediately [illegible] as Jeff Davis and command[illegible] him to surrender. Davis, [illegible] who was caught, threw back [illegible] and, bearing his breast, exclaimed:

"Shoot me! shoot me!"

The soldier brought his rifle to a level and was just about to fire when Sergeant Lane rushed between the man and Davis and ordered him to lower his gun. The soldier obeyed, and Lane, stepping up to Davis, made him a prisoner, at the same time assuring him that none of the soldiers would harm him. This was a great surprise to the ex-President of the Confederacy, as he afterward told Lane he expected to be shot down upon being recognized.

In the meantime Mrs. Davis, for it was she who had accompanied her husband, had fainted, and the rest of the troops had come up. Lane turned Davis over to Colonel Pritchard, the officer in command, and Mrs. Davis was then placed in an ambulance. The troops then returned to Murfreesboro, Tenn., where Davis was kept for awhile, and afterward removed to Nashville and subsequently to Washington. A corporal of the Fourth Michigan, who happened to be near the place where Davis was captured but took no part in the capture, accompanied the distinguished prisoner to Washington. Here the corporal was presented as the captor of Davis, and he was immediately rewarded with a lieutenant's commission in the regular army.

The real captors have not to this day been rewarded in any way, though Lane says he heard that Colonel Pritchard received some money for the capture. Lane says that Davis, after the excitement attending the capture was over, accepted the position philosophically and was a very obedient prisoner.

Judge Over of the Orphans' Court of this county was also present at Davis's capture. He was a member of the Fourth Michigan cavalry.

Feeding Chickens by Clockwork.
New Haven Register.

Fred Leach of Ansonia has some fine poultry, and he believes in feeding them as regularly as he eats his meals. He is unable to be at home at night before the chickens go to roost, and in order that they may be fed without fail he has rigged up an apparatus which works like a charm. The usual quantity of corn is placed in a tin can, which is suspended from a string and weighted. An alarm clock in the outer coop releases the string at a certain hour, the can turns bottom side up and the corn is scattered. There are four coops and each has its can, all working at the same time.

A FRENCH ARTIST.

Henry James on Daumier the Caricaturist.

From a profusely illustrated article in the January Century we quote the following: "There is a magnificent drawing of the series of 'Le Public du Salon,' old classicists looking up, horrified and scandalized, at the new romantic work of 1830, in which the faces have an appalling gloom of mystification and platitude. We feel that Daumier reproduces admirably the particular life that he sees because it is the very medium in which he moves. He has no wide horizon; the absolute bourgeois hems him in, and he is a bourgeois himself, without poetic ironies, to whom a big cracked mirror has been given. His thick, strong, manly touch stands, in every way, for so much knowledge. He used to make little images, in clay and in wax (many of them still exist), of the persons he was in the habit of putting forward, so that they might constantly seem to be 'sitting' for him. The caricaturist of that day had not the help of the ubiquitous photograph. Daumier painted actively, as well, in his habitation, all dedicated to work, on the narrow island of St. Louis, where the Seine divides and where the monuments of old Paris stand thick and the types that were to his purpose pressed close upon him. He had not far to go to encounter the worthy man, in the series of 'Les Papas,' who is reading the evening paper at the cafe with so amiable and placid a credulity, while his unnatural little boy opposite to him finds sufficient entertainment in the much satirized 'Constitutionnel.' The bland absorption of the papa, the face of the man who believes everything he sees in the newspaper, is as near as Daumier often comes to positive gentleness of humor. Of the same family is the poor gentleman, in 'Actualites,' seen in profile, under a doorway where he has taken refuge from a torrent of rain, who looks down at his legs with a sort of speculative contrition and says, 'To think of my having just ordered two pairs of white trousers.' The tout petit bourgeois palpitates in both these sketches.

Scratched 28 Years.

Body covered with scales. Itching terrible. Suffering endless. No relief. Doctors and medicines fail. Speedily cured by Cuticura at a cost of $5.

Cured by Cuticura

If I had known of the Cuticura Remedies twenty-eight years ago it would have saved me $200 (two hundred dollars) and an immense amount of suffering. My disease (psoriasis) commenced on my head in a spot not larger than a cent. It spread rapidly all over my body and got under my nails. The scales would drop off of me all the time, and my suffering was endless and without relief. One thousand dollars would not tempt me to have this disease over again. I am a poor man, but feel rich to be relieved of what some of the doctors said was leprosy, some ringworm, psoriasis, etc. I took . . . and . . . Sarsaparillas over one year and a half, but no cure. I went to two or three doctors, and no cure. I cannot praise the Cuticura Remedies too much. They have made my skin as clear and free from scales as a baby's. All I used of them were three boxes of Cuticura, and three bottles of Cuticura Resolvent, and two cakes of Cuticura Soap. If you had been here and said you would have cured me for $200, you would have had the money. I looked like the picture in your book of psoriasis (picture number two, "How to Cure Skin Diseases"), but now I am as clear as any person ever was. Through force of habit I rub my hands over my arms and legs to scratch once in a while, but to no purpose. I am all well. I scratched twenty-eight years, and it got to be a kind of second nature to me. I thank you a thousand times. DENNIS DOWNING, Waterbury, Vt.

POSTOFFICE MATTERS AT ALAMEDA.

Camellias in Bloom—A Fruit Packing House—The Influenza—Effects of the Storm.

THE ALAMEDA POSTOFFICE.

Free Mail Delivery—Additional Accommodations.
Encinal.

Postmaster Sturtevant has forwarded to Washington his petition to have Alameda granted the benefits of a free mail delivery. His reports show that the city is entitled to such benefit, as it has transacted the necessary amount of business and has the required population. The report which accompanies his petition shows that the receipts for the past year amounted to $10,015 85, which is slightly over the required amount. The only fear that can be entertained of a failure of the petition to insure the desired result is that the report is not for this fiscal year, as may be necessary. The report is for the year ending December 31st, while the fiscal year ends on the 30th of June next. However, if the matter is deferred till that time the business will no doubt show an additional increase, and the question will then be decided without delay, as the officials will be fully cognizant of the growth of Alameda, and the requirements from the standpoint of postal facilities. Mr. Sturtevant will now also renew his exertions for additional accommodations at the postoffice. The present rooms are far too small for the needs of the office, and the inconvenience of the people who have business there is almost as great as those experienced by the postmaster and his assistant. It is thought that a thousand dollars will fully cover the cost of enlarging the office and making the necessary improvements, which amount it is hoped to raise by subscription.

CAMELLIAS IN BLOOM.

Haywards is at the Front With Good Specimens.
Haywards Journal.

The Bakersfield, Kern county, Californian of January 4th says:

"In the front yard of Joseph F. Smith's residence stands a beautiful tree which has eleven camellias from half-open to full blown, and by actual count there are 150 buds. Most of the flowers are perfect, of creamy hue, with the faintest tinge of pink, although some have suffered a little from the pelting rain of last week. But the tree is a sight worth beholding."

We can hold Kern county down in raising the most delicate plants without the least exertion. This beautiful flower grows prolifically in the open air in this valley. About the finest specimen we have heard of is growing in the garden of John Finch on B avenue. It has been loaded with the most beautiful flowers for two months past, the camellias being of a delicate pink color, exceedingly large and full, and is a sight worth seeing. Last year this tree had over 100 buds, and this year it is equally prolific. Miss Hanna Brickell of Castro valley also has a prize camellia that flourishes in the open air, and the flower is of a bright red hue.

A NEW CHARTER.

Haywards Talks of Organizing Under the Municipal Government Law.
Haywards Journal.

The importance of Haywards working under the County Government Bill as a town of the sixth class is now recognized by all who have given the subject careful consideration. The time has come for our people to become familiar with the workings of the new law and the benefits derived by adopting it. The question has become a serious one from the fact that there is a doubt now existing regarding the validity of our charter since a recent decision of the Supreme Court, in one particular at least—in regard to street work—and no time should be lost in presenting the matter clearly before our people. The committee appointed last year to take hold of this question—J. Hetherington, chairman; J. Rupprecht, secretary; S. D. Ingram, A. C. Bloomer, H. Powell, and George Bramall—are requested to meet at the store of J. Hetherington on this Saturday evening, January 18th, at 7 o'clock.

THE RHOTLEOFF.

Alameda Officialry Attacked by the Influenza.
Alameda Argus.

"Temple Bar" has been in a demoralized condition the past couple of weeks. A severe attack of influenza, which may be denominated la grippe, rhotleoff, or any other title, invaded those legal precincts and claimed as its victims every occupant of the building. The first to succumb was Justice Byler, who is now almost recovered. Deputy Constable Carlson was next taken down, and was quite ill for a couple of days. The next victim was Constable Morris, who also suffered from a slight attack of pneumonia and had to remain in bed several days. G. E. Colwell yielded to the disease and had to remain indoors. R. B. Tappan, who came very near giving up the ghost in the building through asphyxiation, was taken down with the disease and had to take several doses of quinine before he felt himself again. Then Miss Lida C. Phelps, Tappan's clerk, fell a victim to the disease and suffered quite severely from it for several days. At last accounts all were convalescent.

THE PEA CROP KNOCKED OUT.

Heavy Damage by the Rains in Eden and Washington.
Haywards Journal.

As was expected, the frosty weather brought another storm, and the roads, just drying up, were rendered even worse than before. The rainfall Wednesday and Thursday evenings was unusually heavy. The protracted rain has knocked out the early pea crop, and all or most all will have to replant. The vines were loaded with blossoms, and in some cases the crop had nearly matured when the hail storm arrived, and when it cleared up the young peas were knocked silly. In speaking with Oscar Hill Thursday, he stated that the damage in this section alone to the pea crop is $10,000, while in Washington township it must be much heavier. He had the briggest outlook three weeks ago he ever had, but now his whole crop is ruined, and he will have to purchase more seed to replant his crop. This will make the crop of peas late this spring.

An Oakland Man's Antimony Mine.
Bakersfield Californian.

A. Blanc, a gentleman from Oakland, who has been having some mines prospected on Erskine creek, discovered a curious looking ore, which he took to San Francisco for determination. It puzzled almost all the experts, until by analysis it proved to be native antimony, and almost chemically pure. The occurrence of metallic antimony in a native State is only once before known. In a scientific work, published over 100 years ago, mention is made of the discovery at Auvergne, France, of a small deposit of pure antimony. The metal is fine grained, with steely fracture, and has puzzled all the metallurgists. It is not expected that much will be found, but, from its rarity to find any at all may be considered a metallurgical event. A few pieces of it are now in the little case which was exhibited by the Kern county Board of Trade at the Mechanics' Fair.

THE GENTLEMEN OF HAYWARDS

Are Not to Be Outdone in Zeal by the Ladies.
Haywards Journal.

Noticeable improvements are being made in and about the Episcopal Church in Haywards. A shed, fifty feet long, for horses and carriages, has been erected in the rear of the church, and front of the property an ornamental fence has been built. The interior of the church is being decorated by a coat of blue paint on the ceiling, and by the staining and varnishing of the rafters and side walls the appearance of the edifice is much improved. We understand there is talk of painting the outside of the church and also of enlarging the vestry room so that the latter may be used for Sunday school purposes and for meetings of the Ladies' Society. These improvements, when completed, will cost in the neighborhood of $400. In connection with the building of the shed an unusual scene was witnessed. The gentlemen in the church, not to be outdone in zeal by the ladies, assembled and in two or three days erected with their own hands the structure which remains as an evidence of their skill and interest in the work. While they were busily employed one was reminded of the old fashioned "building bees," which all of us have heard about but few of us have ever seen.

Livermore Reminiscences.
Livermore Herald.

The passing away of two of the pioneers of our town in one week recalls many reminiscences of those days in the minds of the few who remain. Both settled in town twenty years ago last fall, when the railroad had just been completed through the valley. There were then probably about seventy-five people in the little hamlet. Mr. Anthony and his son established a stove and tinware business at what was then Laddsville. Leonard Beck erected the building which still stands at the corner of First and J streets, and started a store. At that time there were but two other buildings on our present main business street and the residence portion of our town was unthought of. The residents of the town at that time who are now alive and residing here may be counted on the fingers of one hand.

Livermore Cuttings for Mexico.
Livermore Herald.

John Concannon shipped his second and third carloads of grape cuttings to Mexico during the past week. The fourth will follow in ten days. They are packed in boxes containing about 4000 cuttings each, and well surrounded with damp moss and sawdust. At the Mexican frontier they are received by an officer of the Mexican Government. Each box is marked here with the name of the plantation owner who is to receive cuttings from the Government for experiments in his locality. They will then be distributed at once. They will go to nearly every section of the country. The Mexican Government can well be congratulated upon its good fortune in contracting with Mr. Concannon. He has obtained every cutting in Livermore valley, where there is no disease affecting the vine.

A Fruit Packing House.
Haywards Journal.

The Haywards Fruit Growers' Association have decided to erect a commodious building, 50x150, at the station, to be used as a packing house, warehouse, and box factory. It will be erected as soon as the weather settles. This means business, and our association will make a record in 1890 that will astonish other sections of the State.

An Unprofitable Contract.
Alameda Argus.

The contractors on the tidal canal are having a hard time. But little progress has been made for two months, owing to the rains. It was said in our hearing the other day, by a man who ought to know, that this contract is an unprofitable one at best. We trust this is not true, for the Government can afford to pay fair prices for all its improvements.

Biting Off Real Estate
Alameda Argus.

The waves on the southerly bay shore were furious last Wednesday night and bit off huge slices of the embankment wherever unprotected. Some of the owners had just completed bulkheads, and they consider themselves very lucky, as otherwise they would probably have lost four to ten feet of real estate.

DR. WILSON'S DAMAGE SUIT.

Attorney Smith Was Working on a Contingent Fee.

In the suit of Mrs. Dr. M. Wilson against the Fourteenth Street Railroad Company, Attorneys Whitmore and Chapman have been substituted as attorneys for the plaintiff in place of Thomas H. Smith, deceased. Mrs. Wilson was thrown from a car of the defendant's road, and her leg was broken. In the Superior Court she recovered a judgment for $10,000 damages. The case is now on appeal to the Supreme Court. Attorney Smith, who tried the case in the lower court, was working on a contingent fee, and in the event of success he was to receive one half of the amount recovered. The attorneys substituted will represent the plaintiff in the Supreme Court.

Sayings of the Wise Men of East Oakland.

A BRIDGE IN A PERILOUS CONDITION.

Strengthening the Bulkhead Near the Cotton Mills—A Reception to a Pastor.

East Eleventh street, east of Thirteenth avenue, is covered with two feet of mud.

Miss Alice Brayton of Fourteenth street has returned to the Notre Dame Convent.

Michael Nolan's two story house on Fourteenth street and Fifteenth avenue is completed.

A new cement sidewalk is being laid on the corner of Tenth avenue and East Twelfth street.

H. H. Tilley has been making repairs on his store on Thirteenth avenue and East Twelfth street.

Mr. Richter is erecting a handsome cottage on East Twelfth street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues.

J. A. Peters, the telegraph operator at Tubbs Hotel, expects to start soon on a trip to Portland, Oregon.

Edward Dodge has been appointed deputy assistant ticket collector on the Thirteenth avenue horse car line.

The work of relaying the Twelfth street car tracks is seriously delayed on account of the inclement weather which prevails.

The culvert at the intersection of Fourteenth street and Twenty-second avenue is choked and the streets in the neighborhood are flooded.

The doctors say that there is more sickness in East Oakland at the present time than at any time previous of which they have any recollection.

Business men at Twenty-third avenue complain that business is dull on account of the weather. This is especially so with real estate agents.

George Lewis, a former driver of the hose cart at the Brooklyn engine house, who has been ill with hemorrhage of the lungs, is in a precarious condition.

A. C. Rumble and wife of San Francisco have taken up their permanent residence at Tubbs Hotel. Mr. Rumble is chief engineer and general manager of the Laundry Farm Railroad under the new management.

Thomas Wheaton, proprietor of the property on the southwest corner of East Twelfth street and Thirteenth avenue, will lay an artificial stone sidewalk around the building. The width of the sidewalk on East Twelfth street will be decreased four feet.

Rev. N. Gibson, the pastor of the United Presbyterian Church of San Francisco, will deliver a lecture in the parlors of the Brooklyn Presbyterian Church on Tuesday evening, under the patronage of the Ladies' Aid Society.

The new Tubbs Hotel Cab Company is daily expecting the vehicles, which have been ordered from the Boston Hurdle and Phaeton Company. Three eight seated coaches and two hansom cabs have been ordered, but are delayed by the storms in the mountains.

A reception was tendered last evening to the Rev. Frank Dixon, the new pastor of the Tenth Avenue Baptist Church. Mr. Dixon came from Virginia to take charge of this church, Rev. J. Herndon Garnett having resigned to devote his entire time to the Baptist Record, of which he is the editor.

A force of men was engaged yesterday strengthening the dam near the cotton mills in fear of another break in the levee. At present the enclosure is filled with slickens to within a foot of the top, and owing to the recent heavy rains the levee has become somewhat weakened. Hence a plank bulkhead to strengthen the earthwork was built.

James Cobbledick has received several carloads of supplies from the manufactory at Fremont, O., of which he has been appointed the Pacific coast agent, and during the last few days has been hauling them from Brooklyn station to his large new warehouse on Fourth avenue. The supplies consist of agricultural implements, farm tools, wagon wheels, and similar articles.

The bridge over the Fruit Vale creek on Hopkins street near the Hermitage House, is in a very bad condition. The heavy rains and the unusual amount of water in the creek have washed away the foundations from the support, and the bridge has sunk two feet. The street cars no longer attempt to cross and passengers are compelled to walk in the mud from the creek to Fruit Vale avenue. Wagons still pass over the sunken structure, but it is becoming gradually worse, so that if something is not done shortly, it is liable to collapse. Road Overseer Johnston of Fruit Vale Road district has made a few repairs on the east side of the bridge, which belongs to the county, but nothing has been done on the other side, which is inside the city limits.

DISTRICT SCHOOLS

Very Different From the Old Time Classes.

TEACHERS ELECTED AND RESIGNED.

A Bond Election to Be Held in Alviso District—The Large School at San Leandro.

Frank Dunn, who has been teaching in the Centerville school, has been elected to a position in the Cogswell Polytechnic school in San Francisco. Mr. Dunn is a graduate of the State University, and was at one time a teacher in the Mount Eden school.

County Superintendent Fisher has been quite ill during the past week. He was a victim of the grip.

It was proposed to open the Alvarado school next Monday. The rains of the past few days, however, have caused the school grounds to again become flooded, and the opening of the school was again necessarily postponed.

Miss Walcott, vice-principal of the Livermore school, has resigned. Miss Cara Boone of San Ramon has been elected to the vacancy. Miss Boone has been teaching in the San Ramon school for some time past.

Charles H. Clement, principal of the Livermore school, is seeking a position either in the Oakland or San Francisco departments. In his present position he receives a salary of $150 a month. His school, however, is only a ten months school.

The San Leandro school is in a flourishing condition under the care of Principal Charles Woodman, formerly of Chico. There are at present 400 pupils enrolled.

Miss Ellen McCabe has been elected to a position in the Mowry's Landing school, vice Miss Ross, resigned.

Miss E. Kline has been elected to fill the vacancy in the Alviso school caused by the resignation of Miss Annie B. Howell, who has been elected to a position in the Franklin school in Oakland. Miss Howell, however, has only been elected as substitute for six months, during the absence of a teacher.

The trustees of the Alviso school district have given notice of the proposition to vote bonds in the sum of $5000 to build a new schoolhouse. The present school facilities are considered inadequate. There are two classes in separate buildings. There are a great many Portuguese in this district. It is believed by some that they will vote against the extra taxation.

The recent grand jury of ignoble memory found some fault with the Pleasanton school. A leading citizen of that town has informed Mr. Fisher that the taxpayers are entirely satisfied with their new schoolhouse and think they have the finest country school in the county.

The schools in the outskirts of the county will not reopen for at least a month.

A short time since Mr. Fisher received an order to send a teacher to Selma, Fresno county, to teach in the school at that place at a salary of $65 a month for the remainder of the term. The applicant must hold a first grade certificate and must be able to sing and play on the piano. Mr. Fisher stated today that he could not fill the order.

Miss Lina Boone has been elected special teacher of drawing in the Livermore school. Her salary has not as yet been fixed.

DECORATIONS AT THE MILLER PARTY.

The White and Green.

Novelty in decoration marked the party given on Thursday evening by Miss Annie Miller at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Miller, corner of Fourteenth and Union streets.

The drawing rooms are finished in dead white, and there was not another color in the room except vivid verdant green. The fresh green of growing vines hung from the snowy doors, even the ceilings were a mat of creeping green tendrils, and where there had once been fireplaces there were now emerald banks of graceful ferns. There were no flowers in these rooms to disturb the strangely ethereal effect of the two sharply contrasting colors.

The reception room, however, was full of brilliant-hued flowers of every kind. Long ropes of smilax hung from the four corners of the ceiling, met in the center, where they were twirled into a thick rope, from which was suspended a huge yellow ball of ruby-hearted marigolds. The library was a garden of rosebuds and ferns.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather about 150 young people were present. The drawing rooms and the large hall were canvased for dancing, and music was furnished by North Brandt's justly celebrated orchestra. At midnight supper was served at little tables in the dining room and hall, and the party ended in the wee sma' hours of the morning.

Amongst the invited guests were, Mr. and Mrs. G. O. G. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. A. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Will Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Gillis returned on the 2d inst. from the Huasna ranch, where he has been for the last two weeks or more engaged in running a line carving off from the south side of that celebrated grant a tract of some 4400 acres. Mr. Gillis is a civil engineer of great experience and high repute in his profession, and his action was under the order of our superior court, where the line which was to bound conflicting claimants in the cause of a pending legal war. The survey, we should fancy, was anything but a pleasant piece of business at this unprecedentedly inclement season, but it has been made with promptness and dispatch, and undoubtedly with the greatest accuracy. From the Bowels of the Earth.

A buried city in Honduras containing relics in profusion has been unearthed 250 miles from the mouth of the Partook river, among the Payas Indians, and the archaeologists are finding many implements and articles of value of prehistoric times. Strange though it may seem, the people living there were a highly civilized race and knew the value of Henry Schellhaas's bargains as was shown by the great number of his well known wooden benches, lying about.

A Queer Find.

Rhode Wilmer of Shelbyville, Ind., caught a three pound black bass the other day, and found in it a silver quarter. At first it was thought from the appearance of the coin that it was the gold medal awarded to E. D. Ormsby of 1055 Broadway at the Centennial, but that well known photographer assures his patrons that his highly prized medal still adorns his wall, where it may be seen at any time by those doubting his ability to make the best photographs in the United States.

It Dropped Off a Trifle.

The total number of immigrants arrived at the United States from the principal foreign countries during the eleven months ended November 30 was 407,237 against 498,591 during the corresponding eleven months of the year previous. Still O'Connor the merchant tailor continues to make just as good suits as ever at his old stand 1010 Broadway, where he has a number of new fashion plates now on exhibition as well as something new in stripes and plaids for fall and winter suits.

At the Feet of a Nobleman.

A large darning needle was found in the liver of a deer recently killed in the presence of a nobleman, near Vienna. A Viennese microscopist, who examined the liver, found it to be sound save in the immediate proximity of the needle. The deer will be sold by J. B. Baxter of the Cable Meat Market to his customers.

A Sad Accident.

Mr. C. A. Delmarage was walking down Broadway this morning reading a newspaper just after having purchased a new $550 piano when, as he reached the corner of Tenth street, he was seen to hastily throw up his hands and fall in a dead faint; at the same moment a large truck swung around the corner, and the driver, being unable to stop his horses, the heavy wheels passed over the prostrate form of Mr. Delmarage. The bystanders rushed hurriedly to his rescue, but only reached him in time to hear him murmur "Oh, if I had only seen the advertisement of T. B. Potter & Co. before purchasing my piano I could have saved over $200." All intending purchasers should take warning from Mr. Delmarage's sad fate and join the new Piano Club now forming at 1165 Washington street.

WHO HAS CHARGE OF THE STREETS?

The Councilmen Informally Discuss the Board of Works and Water Rates.

The Street Committee of the City Council met last evening in the Council chamber, and the members of the committee invited the remainder of the councilmen to act in connection with them as a committee of the whole, which invitation was accepted. Messrs. Camron, Collins, Hackett, Towle, Kirk, Wakefield, Macdonald, Earl and Brosnahan were present, Mr. Macdonald acting as chairman of the meeting.

A discussion at once arose in regard to the matter of employing attorneys to pass upon the relative position of the Board of Public Works and the Council in the Street Superintendent.

It was suggested by Mr. Camron that the Council settle this matter by passing an ordinance conferring upon the Board of Public Works the power in a general way given it by the charter. The charter declares that the Board of Public Works shall do such work as the Council shall dictate.

Mr. Hackett referred to section 25 of the charter, and said that it is altogether unnecessary to employ attorneys to settle this matter, as the charter defined the duties plainly enough.

Mr. Wakefield suggested that a resolution be passed giving the board power to instruct the Superintendent of Streets to do whatever work it is necessary to have done.

Mr Kirk said that the several Councilmen had lately been attending to all the street work and he was getting tired of it.

Mr. Camron thought the Board of Works had lowered its dignity by delaying work on the street, thus preventing from employment fifty men who are dependent on the Associated Charities for support for themselves and families.

Upon motion of Mr. Camron further discussion of this matter was laid over till after the next regular meeting of the Council. In the meantime it is expected that the report of Fred L. Button on the compilation of ordinances will assist in setting dispute of authority.

It was decided to introduce a resolution asking the City Engineer to prepare estimates for an official map of the city, showing grades, etc., such as is provided for in section 101 of the charter, and report to the Council the probable expense and the time it will require to furnish the city with such a map.

Mr. Macdonald referred to a resolution that had been introduced by him at the last meeting, directing the Street Superintendent to report regarding the streets and said that the Superintendent told him it would be impossible to do so owing to lack of clerical assistance in his office. Mr. Macdonald said it is necessary to keep the cross walks in continual repair at the expense of the city.

Mr. Camron thought the city ought to buy apparatus for laying bituminous rock crosswalks, as continual repairs will have to be made on the crosswalks of the city for the next three years.

Mr. Wakefield said that George Perine had told the Council some two months ago that it would be cheaper to let the work out to some paving company than to go to the expense of hiring men and buying a machine.

Mr. Hackett informed the Council that a civil engineer had not been appointed by the Board of Public Works, as the charter requires the board to do.

Mr. Camron read a portion of the charter, which requires the Board of Public Works diligently to report to the Council the condition of streets, repairs needed, etc.

After considerable discussion it was decided, upon motion of Mr. Hackett, that the Board of Public Works be requested by the Council to look into the condition of the streets, and report to the Council.

Mr. Camron said the charter defined the duties of the Board of Public Works very plainly, and he is not in favor of insulting them by telling them what is in the charter.

Mr. Hackett spoke of a conversation he once had with ex-Mayor Pierce, who said that if he should appoint a Board of Public Works it should be of men who would attend to the work of the city and no other business. "These three now in office," continued Mr. Hackett, are drawing their $200 per month, but are attending to their business, the same as you or I."

Some discussion then arose in regard to the water question, and it was decided that the Councilmen assist the water committee in settling that matter. Mr. Hackett remarked that it will take several nights to settle this matter, and Mr. Camron said he is willing to set there night after night till the water question be satisfactorily settled.

The condition of Sixteenth street, near the depot, was then brought up and it was decided that work should be commenced on that street at once.

Mr. Camron thought that work on the streets ought to be done in a systematic manner; that the main thoroughfares should be attended to, and the side streets afterward.

The committee then adjourned to report to the regular meeting of the Council next Monday night.

A Hopeless Case.

Oh, 'twas a truly shocking case!
They called in a physician,
Who swore he never saw a man
In such a dire condition;
Altho' disease's hydra head
To drown was his ambition,
This was a case he couldn't cure—
He owned it with contrition.

He talked in classic term and quaint
Of treating exostosis;
He told most tantalizing tales
Of boils and ichthyosis;
But when, at last, he touched the case
In hand, he vowed it froze his—
E'en his, a doctor's—blood to give
The dreadful diagnosis.

He'd worked, he said, amazing cures,
In spite of all the skeptics
He'd made pyemia pleasant with
His datent antiseptics;
He'd rehabilitated hordes
Of every day dyspepsics,
Not counting in a hundred more
Or less of cataleptics.

"Were this," quoth he, "some simple thing,
Like mumps or meningitis,
Like yellow-fever, cholera,
Smallpox or synovitis,
I'd get the best of it—or gout,
Or goitre, or e'en gastritis—
But 'tis, alas! a hopeless case
Of megalocephalitis!" —Boston Globe.

A Prominent Regular Physician of New York City gives the following directions

For Preventing or Curing Influenza or "La Grippe:"

Evaporate morning and evening a few tablespoonfuls of POND'S EXTRACT and inhale the vapor. Pour the POND'S EXTRACT into a tin cup, which hold over the flames of a lamp; hold the nose over the cup that the vapor may be inhaled. By this treatment the membrane of the nose and throat will be in such condition that it will resist the poisonous action of the germs which are the cause of this disease; and if the germs have already been inhaled they will be destroyed. The symptoms of the "La Grippe" are, inflammation of the lining membrance of the nose, which may extend to the lungs, with cough, sneezing, running at the nose and perhaps severe aching pains and high fevers. These directions are for POND'S EXTRACT only. It may be unsafe to use any other article in this way.

A Modern Christian.

One stern Scotch divine, of the old uncompromising type, walked out of Plymouth Church on Thursday because the Rev. Lyman Abbott, the new incumbent of Henry Ward Beecher's pulpit, made his confession of faith. That confession is quite interesting, because it is, in a large measure, typical of the new Christianity, which is rather a habit than a creed. In fact, from Dr. Abbott's very non-committal statement it would be most difficult to say what he does believe, as will appear from the telegraphic report, which says:

Dr. Abbott was characteristically frank. When speaking of the Trinity he said: "As to God's relations with Christ, God is so great and I am so small that I don't know anything about it." There was considerable applause at this statement.

"What is your conception of God in man and God and man?" asked Dr. Reed. "The answer was: "No psychology on Christ is possible. I do not think God is two distinct beings, mysteriously joined, but that God was tabernacled among men and entered into a perfectly possessed human life by the divine spirit, so that man's whole thought and life is the thought and life of God. My faith in God rests on my faith in Christ, as God manifest in the flesh. On my faith in Christ rests also my faith in the Bible. So my faith in miracles also rests on my faith in Christ. My faith in immortality also rests upon Christ, upon his word and his resurrection. It can be hardly necessary to add that my hope for myself and for the world rests on Christ, that is, on the helpfulness of God as manifested in Christ."

That introductory touch of the reporter, where he says that Dr. Abbott was "characteristically frank" is delicious when compared with the indistinct, blurred statement of his creed made by the reverend gentleman. These are what may be called disembodied opinions, floating in vapory phrases above all systems of thought; an undefined Christianity, which opposes itself to nothing; the opinions of a man who does not know how far he goes, but does not want to go "too far," perhaps because he is adroit, perhaps because of the spongy texture of his mind. On the doctrine of the Trinity he is agnostic, but will not say he does not believe it, and on the divinity of Christ he slides out of the back door with the dictum that "No psychology on Christ is possible," and explains it with the hazy statement that "God was tabernacled among men, and entered into a perfectly possessed human life by the divine spirit, so that man's whole thought and life is the thought and life of God." That may be "characteristically frank," but all the same it is capable of two or three distinct interpretations. It is not a crime to disbelieve in either the Trinity or the Incarnation, but a man should have the courage of his convictions, and not avoid stating his position on one doctrine by saying he cannot understand it and on the other by wrapping it in a cloud of misty definition which may mean incarnation, possession, or merely inspiration. It is little wonder the old Scotch doctor would have none of him.

THE latest conspiracy to defraud a life insurance company was defeated in an odd way. George T. Reddington of Kearney county, Kan., had his life insured for $14,000, payable to his wife. It was given out that he was dead, and to guard against all contingencies he wrote to his mother in Canandaigua, N. Y., explaining the scheme, so that when she received notice of his death, which was to be telegraphed to her, she need not be alarmed or take any steps in regard to the disposal of the body. Unfortunately for him, the letter was delayed, and the telegram reached its destination first. It was answered by a telegram to have the body placed in a metallic casket and sent East. As the burial had already taken place, the Coroner was asked to exhume the body. He found the coffin empty. Reddington, hiding in the cellar, had been an interested participant in his own obsequies.

FARMER CAROTHERS of Fresno has been taught an expensive lesson by the courts on the governance of an unruly member. He made love to Miss Ida Hutchings, offered to marry her, and was refused. In spite he told his friends and her friends that the lady was not pretty, and had a crooked leg. That will cost him $7500, besides trimmings in the way of costs, which will teach him to talk of things which at best are only a matter of understanding.

Whom to Marry?

The Rev. James White has been answering, for the benefit of the youths of Fresno, the momentous question "Whom to Marry?" His standard is so high and his rules so exacting that, should they be generally adopted by the young men, his hearers, there will be no marriages made in Fresno. We quote:

The ideal girl must be matured in body, mind and convictions. She must have practical sense and a practical education. She must be married for her womanly character and intrinsic worth, and not for her fine form and beautiful face. She must be robust, full of womanly instincts and ambitions. She must have good literary tastes. She must be of sweet disposition and good temper. She must know the value and use of a dollar. She must be of high instincts, with such a high opinion of her womanhood as to lift her above the low and vulgar practice of flirting. In addition to these good qualities she must be home loving, must have a good mother, a high conception of true manhood, an ability to give good counsel in the affairs of life, a heart predominating over the intellect, and she must be of religious convictions.

Such, young ladies, is the catalogue of qualifications in which it is your duty, as you hope to be married, to make yourselves perfect. Not all of you can be beautiful, nor is this essential, but you can all be good, and that is much better. It will not do, however, to be content with being yourselves good, but you must proceed to train your mothers to be good likewise, so that under the benevolent rule of the Rev. Mr. White the coming man shall not marry a bad mother-in-law!

A RECENT paragraph about a grove of bamboo which flourishes on the grounds of General R. W. Kirkham in this city is going the rounds of the country press, and is receiving the customary typographical mangling. When last seen, it was General Lirkem's grove. It will soon be gazetted as the property of General Shirkem, and the owner will be lucky if in six months he escapes being described as General Firkin.

Stockholder Swenarton Says They Will Close Permanently.

The Result of the Meeting of Stockholders Foreshadowed in "The Tribune" of Yesterday.

John A. Swenarton was called on last night for particulars in regard to the California Hosiery Company, in addition to those contained exclusively in THE TRIBUNE last evening.

"You told the whole story in your paper this afternoon," said he without a moment's hesitation, "and there's nothing more to say. The directors' meeting was short and to the point. They decided unanimously to close the mill permanently."

"Did anything exciting take place—was there any war or hard words, or anything of that kind?" asked the reporter.

"Not a thing; not a word; they simply closed down, that's all. Good night, sir."

There was point enough in Mr. Swenarton's interview, nor was the "soul of wit" lacking. The facts, too, seemed substantial and emphatic enough, but they were clothed with such magnificent dearth of details, that the disgusted news manager was obliged to seek elsewhere for material to adorn a tale.

V. D. Moody, president of the First National Bank, was the next person called upon. He is a stockholder and a director of the Hosiery Company. He proved a prolific source of information.

"I think you have done us enough harm already," said he, "you better let the matter drop where it is."

"It's news, Mr. Moody," pleaded the scribe. "I'm only hunting for news."

"No it isn't news, either," replied the director. "It's our private business and nobody else's business. You've already done us thousands of dollars of injury. If you say anything more you'll only make it worse. If the public finds out that we have decided to close down our stock will depreciate 20 per cent, and our plant 30 per cent. Of course the real estate it won't injure any."

"Then you simply don't wish the public to find out what you have done?"

"It's none of the public's business," was the reply. "Our company has not gone out of existence nor have we decided to disorganize. Whether we start up the mill again in the future will depend very largely on circumstances."

"Then I shall say, shall I, Mr Moody, as coming from you, that the directors have not decided to close down permanently."

"I haven't said anything of the kind," he replied, "and you needn't understand anything as coming from me."

"Mr Swenarton told me last night that you had decided to close and were all of one voice."

"Yes, Mr. Swenarton would like to have it so. Just as long as our mill runs it interferes with his business. He has been trying for three years to get it closed. It is to his interest to have it known that we have closed."

THE TRIBUNE only receives the complete report of the Associated Press.

A PROPERTY SMILE

C. E. Locke's Open Sesame to Bank Accounts.

A MANAGER OF DOG SHOWS AND OPERA.

Genius Expresses Itself in Great Gobs Throughout the Career of the Impressario.

The severest winter San Francisco can remember, money very scarce, and at least 20 per cent of the population down with what they call la grippe, all tend to make the season unusually dull. Quite a number of parties have been postponed on account of the prevalence of sickness, and the places of amusement have been but poorly patronized.

The theaters have suffered considerably, and even the Emma Juch Opera Company, which, as the first decent opera company here for weeks, expected to turn many away, has had but small houses after the first night.

The appearance of Emma Juch at the head of an opera company is a striking illustration of the great excess of the demand for artists over the supply. She has a fair voice, and sings with some feeling, but she is no more able to carry the burden of the heavy operatic roles than one little flute is to take the place of an entire orchestra. She is a pleasant faced, amiable young woman, with plump arms and a doll's face, but she is neither a great actress nor a great singer.

I am not going to compare her with Patti, who is the common standard of comparison, albeit, a most untrustworthy one. Patti has two reputations, one as a singer, the other as Patti, and both go to raise the price of tickets. It is the correct thing to gush over Patti, to call her the peerless queen of song and say that she is divine, when the fact is that she is a woman with a good voice, a clever actress with a piquant face, a throat like a bull terrier and the keenest scent for a dollar of any woman on earth, save the famous Mrs Langtry.

It is not necessary to compare Emma Juch with Patti to get her rating in the world of melody any more than it would be to compare Colonel Robinson with Baby Anson as a baseball impresario. Nordica is still alive and so are Emma Nevada and Sibyl Sanderson.

Emma Juch has one great advantage over most singers. She has Charles E. Locke for her manager. Locke is one of those brainy men who made a record every century. He is not yet a century old, but he has made several records. It was comparing opera with baseball that first put Locke's name in my head. Locke had an interest in baseball once. I think it was in 1878, when the Chicagos first came to San Francisco, that Locke was in the baseball line of life. He is an operatic manager now and no doubt has forgotten all about the old, old times, and it will give him a great deal of pleasure, I am sure, to be reminded of them. A Napoleon of operatic finance, who had the ability to induce Mrs. Thurber, the wife of a grocer, and other ladies to invest half a million in elevating their countrywomen by running an opera company and a school for the ballet, might be expected to have a past full of interest, and Locke does not disappoint in his back number.

Locke's first real prominence in San Francisco was as one of the managers of the first big dog show held at the old Mechanic's Pavilion on Mission street. That was in 1887. There were a lot of dogs there. Locke, Pond, Barton and Andoe were the managers and there were other attractions but the show did not pay. About the end of the week Locke, to draw a crowd, advertised a grand rat killing match open to all comers. The police sent him word that they would arrest him if the show went on. Locke, who was then the owner of a fine property smile in good order put it on exhibition and swore that the match would go on police or no police. How well do I remember the great man in the attitude of Napoleon at St. Helena, declaring that he had a special permit and would sue the police for interfering with his business.

Of course the expected match drew a big crowd, and of course no rats were slain, but it was worth twice the price of admission to hear Locke's excuse. He said that he had not been able to secure any rats.

It was on that occasion that the word "rats" first came into general use as a term of derision.

After that Locke ran the Bush Street Theater. Barton ran the California till he became short of funds, and Andoe ran a bath house at North Beach in partnership with Bovee, the real estate man, and a shoe dealer named Paul Rebfisch. The Bush Street Theater was not large enough for a man of Locke's genius. He met a man named W. W. Kelley who had worked a scheme known as the "Authors' Carnival" in Boston, and got hold of his plans. Kelley was a smart fellow, but talked a trifle too much. He does the same thing now as the manager of Grace Hawthorne, an actress who works off bad American plays on the London public. He told Locke all about his "Authors' Carnival" scheme, and Locke got the ladies who managed six large charities interested.

The idea was for the charities to pay all the expenses of the show, for Locke to take one fourth of the gross receipts, and give the remainder to the charities. W. W. Kelley was sent East to negotiate for the Chicago baseball club, and Locke ran the carnival in such a way that he cleaned up more than $10,000 for his share, besides a lot of scenery and properties. There was some complaint about the size of Locke's grab, but the other parties were women, and Locke's smile was never known to fail with the other sex.

Kelley came back and made a fuss. Locke was liberal and gave him all the prospective profits of the Chicago baseball club's games. Two months after Kelley went East in an emigrant car, while Locke bought out a bric-a-brac store on Geary street and refitted the Bush Street Theater. Then the Bush became the swell theater of the town. Locke used to bring plates and things from the Geary street bric-a-brac store to decorate the interior of the theater, and he also did many other things to make his house ultra fashionable and respectable, for Locke's strong point was always in making a good impression on women, and he knew how strongly the softer sex insist on style and respectability. Some of the sacrifices this man made on behalf of respectability were almost heoric. He had a soprano in his opera company—Miss Emilie Melville—who never sang on Sunday, and when he put on that naughty opera, "Boccacio," he had dresses made for the pages that positively enveloped them.

"I know" he would say to such sinful humans as Walter Turnbull and Peter Robertson when they complained "that you men expect something more dashing, but I am determined to conduct a theatre on such principles that no lady need blush to let her husband know she was at the matinee. Then these men would go home and tell their wives and families what a humbug Locke was and the demand for bogus bric-a-brac at the Geary street store would double and Locke's property smile would be worked so hard that he had to treat it to a course of sea tasting to bring it into condition for use when some impertinent people called on him for an accounting the second year of the authors carnival.

Having worked the respectable end of the town for his second hand stock of bric-a-brac and induced the public to accept a lot of amateurs as an opera company Locke turned his attention to another grade of societies. He imported a couple of young women from the East clothed them in very short dresses, laid a sawdust track in Platt's hall and had the young women walk a quarter of a mile every fifteen minutes. It was a show calculated to sober the hilarity of a gibbering maniac, but it drew full houses and made money. It lasted for thirty days and during all that time the doors were never closed and the hall was never quite free from visitors. Late at night, after the theaters, the roystering crowd would drop in to see Madame Chanelle or May Howard walk a few laps to the inspiring strains of a damaged piano, which was played by a very dissipated young man, who had formerly been in the employ of Peter Dorcey, then of Grant avenue. The success of the walking match, which, by the, way, was not a match at all, for each of the women was hired at a regular monthly salary, emboldened Charles E. Locke and his partner, Ned Cotton, to enter into the management of a six day walking match at the Mechanics' Pavilion. A couple of fifth rate "peds" from New York, one waiter from the Russ House, one waiter from the Occidental, one car driver from the Mission street line, one shoeblack from Bush street, and a clown made up the array of contestants. They walked six days, drew enormous houses, made a record of about 300 miles, and went home. The night before the close of the match Cotton became involved in a row with "Con" Mooney and Jimmy Nolan, which resulted in Cotton going to bed with a split head. Locke took charge of the funds and wound up the business. About nine months later Cotton went over to Alameda and blew his brains out. He was moneyless and despondent. Locke was still the manager of the Bush Street Theater.

About this time Locke began to economize in the matter of paying debts, and gave his smile an awful lot of work to do. He extended the time on his accounts with great liberality to himself. His ready money he used for the purchase of orange groves and other fancy real estate. At the end of a year he had much land and little credit, and moved East. Then he fell in with his old friend Pond, who interested him in some lecture schemes, and had him out on the road as advance agent. In that capacity he made a visit to San Francisco, but did not score a very large success.

The next that was heard of this remarkable man was that he was at the head of the National Opera Company, at a salary of $30,000 a year, and the privilege of making all the purchases.

Free access to the cheque book, and a lady—a being susceptible to the influence of a smile—sole auditor of the accounts.

Mrs. Thurber was worth a million or so, but she could not long hold up the exclusive privilege of backing Charles E. Locke. She managed to unload part of the burden on Charles Crocker, Collis P. Huntington, and a few other New York millionaire enthusiasts Then Locke reveled in the blissful delight of managing a show worthy of his genius. He was at the head of the National Opera Company, and had a couple of hundred millions behind him. As it was an American company and Americans backed the enterprise, he hired for singers all the German and Italian artists in the country. He had one American who was specially engaged to wave a big banner in "Faust." The banner was too heavy for the foreign gentlemen to wave. Locke's brother was assistant manager at a salary of $300 per week, and they had a man to do the work. It was Jones' place to draw a crowd to see the productions of this wonderful company. Jones always had a valise full of free tickets, and drew splendid houses. The dispatches East used to read something like this.

Business magnificent. Houses crowded. Turned more than 1000 away last night. Send $2000 to pay the salary of the chorus.

One day Mrs. Thurber's friends grew uneasy, and the National Opera Company collapsed. There was a lot of talk about extravagance in the management, but that was all.

Locke always had a genius for postponing payments, but sometimes he met his match. Several months before he left San Francisco he had failed to pay his stage hands. He was so much in debt to the newspapers at that time that he had to pay each night the silver for the next day's advertisement before it was inserted. The stage hands had an idea they could bring him to time, and tried a scheme. When the bell rang for the curtain to rise next night it failed to ascend. The bell rang again and again, but the curtain never budged.

Locke dashed upstairs to the fly gallery.

"Why do you not raise the curtain?" he demanded angrily.

"Can't find the crank for the windlass," was the reply.

"Well, hurry up and find it. Are you blind?"

"Well, Mr. Locke, you can't expect a man to see very well when his salary is three weeks overdue."

Locke stormed and swore that they should not get a cent unless the curtain was raised at once.

All the men did was to laugh.

Then he sent for another curtain barrel crank. It came and he ordered the men to raise the curtain. They twisted and tugged and groaned, but not an inch did the thing raise. He thought the men were shamming and told them so.

"Try it yourself," they said.

He did try, and after he had ruined a suit of clothes and spoilt the set of his necktie he said:

"Come down to the office and get your pay."

In five minutes the curtain was up and the play going on.

They had bolted the curtain batten to the stage.

Locke's worst enterprise was the production of an alleged opera called "Pyramus and Thisbe"—music by Oscar Weil, words by Peter Robertson. He had an idea that he knew something about the merit of an opera, and intended to make a business of buying up operas from young composers. When they took off the piece and closed the Bush Street Theater in the middle of the week, "owing to grand preparations for the coming production of 'Under the Gaslight'," he concluded that the safest plan was only to buy opera that had been tried and found satisfactory.

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria

A Fact

WORTH knowing is that blood diseases which all other remedies fail to cure, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Fresh confirmation of this statement comes to hand daily. Even such deep-seated and stubborn complaints as Rheumatism, Rheumatic Gout, and the like, are thoroughly eradicated by the use of this wonderful alterative.

Mrs. R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th street, New York, certifies:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months. I am pleased to say that it effected a complete cure, and that I have since had no return of the disease."

Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H., writes: "One year ago I was taken ill with rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."

"I have taken a great deal of medicine, but nothing has done me so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I felt its beneficial effects before I had quite finished one bottle, and I can freely testify that it is the best blood-medicine I know of."—L. W. Ward, Sr., Woodland, Texas.

Purification for Diseases.

Throw physic to the dogs, I'll none of it.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act V.

Purification under the old law did save. —Milton.

Hydropathy and Hygiene is the science of curing disease by purification without the use of physic.

Under its salutary influence all morbid accumulations of poisons and disease are cleansed from the human body.

When properly administered all chronic cases of rheumatism, gout, constipation, indigestion, face blemishes, foul skin eruptions, and other inflammatory diseases are healed.

This law of purification never fails to operate and restore to health unless in the last stage of disease or the vital forces of nature are exhausted by old age.

Invalids who are sick and weary of using physic without avail, may adopt this system and regain their health.

The most enlightened Physicians of the age are now successfully using this purifying system of saving life.

THE ABDICATION

Of the Emperor of Austria Is Expected.

GARCIA'S PISTOL AND VIRGINIA LOVE.

Nicholas Longworth of Ohio Dead—Emin Pasha Has a Relapse—A Fire at Fresno.

I WANT HIM RELEASED.

Because They Do Not Want the County Put to Expense.

COLUSA, January 18.—September 20th last Paul E. Miller shot and killed Robert McMartin at Maxwell in this county. The Coroner's jury obtained the dying statement of McMartin, and on a preliminary examination Miller was exonerated from intent or purpose to harm, and at the time all interested were satisfied. Recently the brother of the deceased was urged to make complaint, charging Miller with manslaughter. When the case came up for hearing, District Attorney Albery moved to dismiss, but Judge Leming of the justice court yesterday held the prisoner to appear before the Superior Court under $2000 bonds. A feeling of disgust pervades the public at putting the people to the expense of a trial that unquestionably will corroborate the testimony given at the inquest.

THE DEPARTMENT RESPONDED

And Put Out the Fire and Did Some Damage.

FRESNO, January 18.—A fire was discovered in the third floor of the Baker block about 5 o'clock this morning. The fire department responded, and after hard work extinguished the fire. The lower floor of the building was occupied by A. F. Baker, grocer, and the upper stories by Mrs. M. J. Hughes as a lodging house. The loss by water and fire to her will be $1000, fully insured. The loss of A. F. Baker's stock by water is $3000, partially insured. The loss on the building is $500. The building was just completed in December.

The Inflammable Northwest.

ELLENSBURG, Wash., January 18.—Before daylight yesterday morning an alarm of fire sounded throughout the Horton, a large three story brick hotel. Three hundred and sixty guests hurried downstairs, many leaving their clothes and valuables. An oil stove, used to heat the coffee tank, had exploded and the kitchen was a mass of flames. A large crowd began fighting the fire and it was soon extinguished. A few hundred dollars will repair the damage. There is only one stairway in the building and that at the front end. There is no doubt but a terrible affair would have been recorded had the fire got under way.

DEATH NICHOLAS LONGWORH.

A Former Justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio.

CINCINNATI, January 18.—Hon. Nicholas Longworth died this morning at his residence on Grandy road of pneumonia. He served for a time as Judge of the Common Pleas of Hamilton county, and later was one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Ohio.

A CHICAGO FIRE.

Which Was Not Confined to a Single Building.

CHICAGO, January 18.—A fire broke out at 3 o'clock this morning in a three-story brick structure on Ninety-second street and spread to the adjacent buildings. The families living in the upper stories narrowly escaped with their lives. One building was totally destroyed and several others much damaged. The total loss is $15,000, insurance very slight.

LOVE AND A PISTOL.

Garcia Shoots His Sweetheart and Then Himself.

SACRAMENTO, January 18.—Early this morning Oliver Santiago Garcia, a young Spaniard, shot Virginia Vasques through the neck and then put a bullet through his own head. The woman's wound is not thought to be fatal, as the ball passed through the muscles at the back of her neck. Garcia can live only a few hours, as his brains are oozing from a frightful wound in his head. He was infatuated with Miss Vasques, who was to leave for San Francisco this morning. It is thought he attempted to persuade her to remain here and that he did the shooting when she refused.

ZANZIBAR, January 18.—The British fleet which sailed south a few days ago has returned to this port.

There is no improvement in the condition of Emin Pasha, who recently relapsed after his partial recovery from the effects of a fall from a balcony at Bagamoyo.

GENERAL VALLEJO.

Death of an Aged and Distinguished Californian.

The High and Ancient Lineage of the Deceased—His Prominent Part in Affairs.

SAN FRANCISCO, January 18.—A dispatch from Sonoma states that General M. G. Vallejo died at his home there early this morning. The funeral will be held next Tuesday.

Mariano Guadalupe Vallejo was of ancient Spanish lineage. One of his ancestors accompanied Cortez in the conquest of Mexico. His grandfather came with Father Junipero Serea to California in 1769, and lived until 1835, leaving a large estate to his thirteen children. M. G. Vallejo was born in 1808 at Monterey, and entered the military service at 16. He took a leading part in the government of California until the American occupation in 1849, and he was a member of the first Constitutional Convention of California, and of the first State Senate. In the latter body, in 1850, he proposed to grant land at the city of Vallejo on a most liberal scale for public building, conditioned upon the location of the State Capitol there. The Legislature accepted the proposition and the people by vote confirmed their action. He erected a State House and some other buildings and the Legislature held two sessions there, but the hotel accommodations were inadequate and Sacramento took the prize away for good. The General suffered a loss of several hundred thousand dollars in this venture, and some years afterward the United States Supreme Court rejected his title to the Suscol rancho, on which the city of Vallejo is situated. He leaves a widow and nine children.

A STRANGE EXPLOSION,

Due to the Contact of Red Hot Iron With Water.

Huge Chunks of Hot Iron Hurled About—One Man Fatally Injured and Two Severely.

NEWCASTLE, Pa., January 18.—An explosion occurred at the Elna Rolling Mill last night in which three men were terribly burned. One of the buggies containing balls of red hot iron upset in a puddle of water. The moment the iron touched the water the explosion occurred throwing huge chunks of iron about the mill, and burning George E. Cox severely about the waist, chest, and neck. William Dwyer, and Richard M. Allinbough were also severely burned about the waist, face, and hands. Cox will probably die, but the other two will recover.

"VIVA LA PORTUGAL"

Is Supplemented Loudly by "Down With England."

A Boycotting Committee Strikes at the Britishor's Pocket—The Note to the Powers.

LONDON, January 18. — A dispatch from Lisbon today states that crowds of people assembled in the streeets last night and shouted, "Viva la Portugal," and "Down with England." Similar scenes were enacted in the principa towns. A vigilance committee has been formed in Lisbon for the purpose of denouncing receivers of English goods. French financiers have declined to negociate loans for Portugal.

LISBON, January 18.—The Portuguese Government anticipates a favorable reply to its note to the Powers asking their intervention in the dispute between Portugal and Great Britain concerning territory in Africa.

Bank Reserves Increased.

NEW YORK, January 18.—The weekly bank statement shows the reserve increase to be $1,705,425.

THE BLOCKADE.

No Overland Trains Expected to Arrive for Twenty-four Hours.

The Wires Are Down and the Trains Held in the Sierras and on Mt. Shasta—Shoveling.

SAN FRANCISCO, January 18.—The northern and eastern bound passenger trains are still blockaded and the prospect is that they will not be able to move for at least twenty-four hours. But meagre reports have been received at the railroad office, owing to the fact that the telegraph wires are down. The northbound train, which left here on Tuesday night, is still held at Sims, while the eastbound trains are at a standstill east of Alta. It is hoped that the latter will be shoveled out soon as a large force of laborers with snow plows have gone to the front and are working hard to raise the blockade.

COULD NOT AGREE

On the Case of a Man Who Assaulted a Modesto Editor.

MODESTO, January 18.—The second trial of George Brown, the son of Captain Brown, chairman of the Board of Supervisors for assault with a deadly weapon with an attempt to murder S. L. Hanscom, editor of the Modesto Herald in August last closed last night. At noon today the jury were discharged, standing seven for conviction and five for acquittal. On the former trial the jury stood eight for simple assault and four for acquittal.

Rev. Elias Birdsall Resigns.

LOS ANGELES, January 18.—Rev. Elias Birdsall, rector of St. Paul's Church, has resigned, owing to ill health. He is the oldest Protestant clergyman in this city. He came here in 1864. At that time there was no Protestant church in Los Angeles.

WALKER BLAINE.

His Funeral Attended by Many Distinguished People,

Including the President and Mrs. Harrison, the Cabinet, and the Diplomatic Corps.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 18.—The funeral of Walker Blaine took place this morning. A large number of the friends of the Blaine family, the members of the diplomatic corps, and people in official life attended the funeral. A private funeral ceremony was held at the home of Secretary Blaine, on Lafayette square at 10:30 o'clock. The President and Mrs. Harrison, all the members of the Cabinet, E. W. Halford, several members of the diplomatic corps, and some intimate friends of the family attended the services, which were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Hamlin, pastor of the Church of the Covenant. At the conclusion of the private services the remains were taken to the Church of the Covenant, followed by the family and friends in carriages.

WRECKED AND RESCUED.

The Crew of a Whaling Bark Is Picked Up.

SAN FRANCISCO, January 18.—Honolulu advices received by the steamer Mariposa today, state that the American whaling bark J. A. Howland went ashore at Johnson's island, 760 miles northwest of Honolulu, on December 26th. The crew reached land safely, except one man, George McDonald, who was drowned. Two days later the whaling bark Abraham Barker touched at Johnson's island, and took the men to Honolulu.

THE IOWA DEADLOCK.

No Likelihood of a Settlement Appears.

DES MOINES, Iowa, January 18.—The situation last night as regards the organization of the House was very much mixed. The Democrats instructed their Conference Committee to propose that the Democrats should have the Speaker and the Republicans the Clerk, and the Democrats should have the Chairmanship of the four following committees: Judiciary, Railways, Appropriations and Suppression of Intemperance. These are the four most important committees of this session. They offered to permit the Republicans to settle on any four, and then the remainder of the committees were to be divided equally between the two parties. The Republicans refused to consider this proposition, so everybody is at sea again. But the Conference Committees are at work trying to fix up some arrangement which will permit of temporary organization today. The Senators have gone home, to be gone until next Tuesday, hoping in the meantime the House will reach some kind of an understanding by which it can do business. Governor Beehr has also gone home. He thinks he can wait at Waterloo for the inauguration quite as well as here, and will escape the importunities of office seekers by so doing. Senator Allison will probably remain till tonight.

WIRES DOWN.

Owing to the protracted and widespread storm, most of the leading telegraph lines are broken, and the dispatches are few in consequence.

OPPOSED TO ANNEXATION.

A Committee Appointed to Fight the Election.

A committee consisting of A. F Porter, John Gelder and J. B. Porter, representing citizens of the district which it is proposed to annex to the town of Berkeley, called on County Superintendent Fisher this morning to ascertain his views in regard to the legality of the election to be held on February 8th. The committee also called upon the District Attorney and asked him to give an opinion in the matter.

The gentlemen are opposed to the proposed annexation, and assert that they will fight it to the end. The proposition is to annex a strip of land 900 feet south of Alcatraz avenue. This strip of land takes in three school houses outside the town of Berkeley—the Bay, Peralta and the Lorin schools. This, of course, leaves those outside the proposed annexed district without any school facilities. The Peralta school district is bonded for $5000 for six years. The Lorin school district is bonded for $15,000 for nine years.

Should the proposed annexation be carried, those residing without the dividing line and in the present school districts will be compelled to pay taxes for maintaining schools over which they have no jurisdiction. Therefore they object to annexation. Mr. Fisher announced himself as opposed to annexation, and stated that he would consult with the school trustees in the three districts and see what could be done in the matter.

BLEW OFF STEAM.

The Noise Caused Harrison Williams's Horse to Run Away.

While Harrison Williams was driving a double team along Telegraph avenue, near Temescal, on November 20th last, the engine used on the road between Berkeley and Temescal, commenced to blow off steam, frightening the horses and causing them to run away. Williams was thrown from his buggy, receiving severe injuries. This afternoon he commenced suit against the Southern Pacific Company to recover $20,000 damages.

And this paper goes to everyone of these places every week.

FOR HALF A YEAR.

Expenses of the City Government From July to January.

Auditor Snow Shows That the City Will Have a Surplus on a Dollar Levy.

The semi-annual statement of Auditor Snow for the first half of the present fiscal year, ending December 31 1889 will be presented to the City Council on Monday night. This statement is issued quarterly, and is a complete report of the demands audited during the quarter and the estimated expenses of the city during that time. Mr. Snow has combined the first and second quarters of the present fiscal year, and will present a semi-annual report to the Council Monday.

This report will show that the demands audited during the six months ending December 31st amounted to $350,471 98.

This, compared with the estimate made by Mr. Snow at the beginning of the fiscal year as a basis for the city tax levy, is $68,351 68 less than one-half of the estimate.

Of the $239,471 98 in demands audited, $11,000 was for the completion of the High school, since burned, and $11,771 was for the dredging of the slip at the city wharf, making a total of $22,771, which amount will not have to be paid out again as the work has been completed, consequently but half of this, $11,387, should be charged upon the coming six months of the fiscal year. In other words, to find the probable expenses of the city for the fiscal year, judging from the light received by the past six months, $11,387 should be deducted from the $239,471 98 of audited demands before it is multiplied by two in order to give the full year's probable expense. This would be $225,084 98 for six months, or $450,169 96 for the year.

The revenue for the past six months, from sources other than taxes has been $37,941 from liquor licenses, and $11,800 from miscellaneous sources. This does not include the school department revenue, which is not received quarterly, but the apportionments are received from the County and State after the taxes are all in, and the school money is consequently not embraced in the revenue. It is believed that it will be fully up to Mr. Snow's estimate.

The revenue from miscellaneous sources is about up to the estimate, but the revenue from liquor licenses exceeds the estimate by $5514. This is caused by the fact that fewer saloons went out of business than was expected when the new liquor license law went into effect.

None of the departments have run over their estimated running expenses, save in a very small degree, and this is balanced by the fact that others have not used half the amount appropriated to them. None of the departments have exceeded the amount appropriated to them when that which was allowed them for increased facilities is considered, and some have not used one of the money allowed them for this work.

According to the figures, if the last half of the present fiscal year is no more expensive than the first half, the city will close with $116,709 38 in the treasury, as saved on a $1, which speaks well for the government under the new charter, which was supposed to be expensive.

Hereafter the Auditor will have a complete set of figures to show the expenses of all departments, and there can be no gross work estimates, such as Mr. Snow was compelled to make. Mr. Snow has had a most difficult term of office to fill, and it required a man with a cool head and a thorough knowledge of the charter to carry the city along as Mr. Snow has done.

BRIEFS.

The Pope has changed his habits. He now devotes the time between half past 5 and 10 o'clock a night for the ardent perusal of newspapers of all nations.

For the first time in its history the British navy has to hunt for stokers. They have established a regular recruiting party similar to that used for the army.

The agitation of William II for the purification of the German language has led to the substitution of the word "raum" for "coupe" on all the German railway carriages.

Krupp, the maker of big guns, has founded a fund of $125,000 for the benefit of those of his workmen who wish to borrow money at low rates for the purpose of building homes for themselves.

NO EASTERN MAILS YET.

The Trains Did Not Arrive at the Pier Last Night.

A Fierce Storm Raging in the Mountains, and Trains May Be Delayed for Days.

The delayed overland trains did not arrive yesterday, as expected, and from reports received today they may be snowbound in the Sierras for several days yet. The railroad company has not had as much trouble before in ten years as it is experiencing at present.

On the Central Pacific line there are two west bound trains at Truckee and one at Emigrant Gap, and one east bound train is at Blue Canyon and another is at Colfax.

A fierce snow storm is raging today in the mountains, and between Blue Canyon and Emigrant Gap the snow is twelve feet deep. It has been found impossible to use the old snow plows, and the railroad company is depending entirely upon its single rotary plow and 500 laborers.

On the Oregon route the train that left here on Tuesday night is snowed in just north of Sims, and Colonel Crocker and Assistant General Superintendent Pratt are on board, and reports snow banked up to the car windows. Between Dunsmuir and Mott the snow is thirty feet deep. The snow all along the line is said to be deeper than it has been for ten years past.

Owing to the storm of today and last night it may require several days' time to get the snowbound trains out.

A special local train arrived at 10.40 A. M. from Colfax and brought down considerable mail, but none of it from any place east of Reno.

Another special local arrived on the Oregon express' time from Red Bluff at the same time.

On the Southern route all the trains are moving without delay.

Rainfall is reported as follows for the past twenty-four hours:

A SPLENDID RECORD.

The Standing Acquired by an Enterprising Firm in Three Years.

Osgood Brothers' Elegant Drug Store Being Fitted Up With Incandescent Lights—A Beautiful Picture.

The leading druggists of Oakland are Osgood Brothers, whose elegant establishment is on the northeast corner of Seventh street and Broadway. This firm probably affords the most brilliant instance in this city of what push and enterprise will do. Though established here only three years, these energetic young men have built up a trade that is quite equal to any in the city, and they have achieved such gratifying success by a uniform system of fair dealing. They serve their patrons with nothing but the best at the lowest living price, always attend promptly to the needs of patrons, and make it their foremost aim to keep in stock everything public demand can suggest. "Go to Osgood's. They keep the best stock of goods in town, and their prices are from 5 to 10 per cent cheaper than at any other place," is the exact advice that will be given in nine out of every ten houses in town. This is putting it strong, but it will stand, since it is no transgression on the truth; and, if it means anything, it means that the public have given their judgment in favor of Osgood Brothers.

This firm carries the largest stock of chemicals of any establishment in Oakland—another broad statement, but justified by the facts. Most druggists in this country depend for their stock on the Pacific coast wholesale houses. Not so with Osgood Bros. They have a constant demand for drugs that must be obtained directly from Europe, and this demand has prompted them to keep a complete supply on hand at all times.

In compounding prescriptions they have no superiors. Having a more elaborate supply of drugs and chemicals than the ordinary drug store of better quality, and being themselves thoroughly skilled in this department, physicians have come to regard their establishment as the best and safest place to have their medicines prepared.

The other departments of their business are not less abundantly and skillfully equipped. Of fancy articles, toilet cases, perfumes of all kinds indeed, everything that fancy could suggest—they have the largest and most varied assortment outside of San Francisco. Beautiful purses, memorandum books, diaries, mirrors, hairbrushes, elegant cut glass bottles, all kinds of toilet soaps, shaving outfits, fine cutlery (such as pocket knives and scissors), sponges, clothesbrushes, etc., etc., they keep in large supplies, and the best that are to be had anywhere.

A remarkable feature of this firm's business is their splendid line of specialties. They are the proprietors of Valentine's Throat and Lung Syrup, fast becoming one of the leading remedies for throat and lung affections, and it has an enormous sale. Every trial of it proves that it was not made to sell, but to cure, and the confidence it has built up in the community is indeed little short of wonderful.

They have also another preparation that fills a sorely-felt want, that is, Osgood's Infallible Headache Remedy, which, as its name indicates, is prepared by themselves, and those who use it have perfect faith in its virtues.

Osgood Brothers believe in improvements. No one else in town is so quick to take advantage of every new convenience that will add to their display and increase the attraction of their store. Though making some kind of an improvement all the time, they are now putting on the crowning improvement. In a day or two more their entire establishment will be lighted with the beautiful incandescent lights, and those who have not seen the difference these make in a place will be amply repaid for visiting their store and taking a long look at the beautiful picture. The Osgood Brothers are very genial, and will gladly welcome any and everybody inside their elegant apartments, whether making a purchase or not. Call on them and see.

MRS. PALMER'S MANSION.

A Bedroom More Beautiful Than Any in the Austrian Court.

The Argonaut of this morning says: "When the lovely Mrs. Honore gave her hand to the wealthy and venerable Potter Palmer it was understood that she should have the finest residence in the City of Chicago. The Hotel Palmer kept his word and not only gave his beautiful wife carte blanche, but allowed her to build the house any way she pleased as she was to live in it and manage it. Soon after the wedding she began the study of architectural art, and the books she bought and read and made selections from aggregated a library which cost $12,000. The castle is a melancholy pile of brown-stone with turrets donjon, tower, minarets, balconies and towers overlooking the mild blue waves of Lake Michigan." Pacific coast talent was imported to decorate and furnish the French drawing-room, the Spanish music-room, the English dining-parlor, the Moorish hall and the Turkish, Japanese and Greek parlors which encircle the gallery on the second floor, all of which were beautifully tinted and frescoed by the Boston Fresco Co., of Oakland. The house contains two elevators, and according to Mrs. U. S. Grant, there is not a chamber in the Austrian court that can surpass the grandeur and beauty of Mrs. Palmer's bedroom. On Christmas last the house was formally opened by a grand ball.

THE TRIBUNE is the only Oakland paper that receives the full Associated Press report.

POND'S EXTRACT CO. "Your most wonderful medicine has cured me of the Piles, that most loathsome disease of the human race. I suffered for years, and would be laid up for weeks, and would have hemorrhages as often as three times a day. I have suffered so intensely that I wanted to commit suicide, but thanks to your medicine, I am cured, sound and well. I only used two 50 cent bottles of your EXTRACT and one bottle of Ointment. I wish I was only able to express myself as forcibly as your medicine deserves." MRS. EMMA HILL, 169 W. New York Street, Indianapolis, Ind.

Don't Get Caught.

Before coal commences its annual rise in value residents of this city should avail themselves of the opportunity to lay in a supply to last them until summer. The matter is an important one to everybody because the weather is such that the mines are liable to close at any time. The best place to buy your supply of fuel is at the yard of J. C. Hussey, at the corner of Sixth and Franklin streets, where coal, wood and coke of all grades are constantly kept. Mr. Hussey makes a specialty of prompt delivery and low prices. Orders may be left at the office at 502 Broadway, or forwarded by telephone No. 31.

Interesting Notes About Farming in Foreign Lands—Sheep in South America.

FARMING IN FOREIGN LANDS.

The number of horses in European Russia is 21,000,000, including six government studs, besides a large number of private ones. The Russian government devotes annually $80,000 to the purchase of stallions, and so widespread has been the interest of late years in improving this stock, that races, trotting matches, and shows have been largely increased all over the country.

Government nurseries are just now being prepared in Cape Colony, Africa, for the further extension and development of American vines,—one near Stellenbosch, one in the Paarl, one near Worcester, and one on a farm between Robertson and Montague. So great is the demand for these vines, that applications were received this year for not less than 130,000 cuttings, of which number only 50,000 could be spared for distribution.

A new process of sewage purification, consisting in the mixing of amines (a group of ammonia compounds) and lime with the sewage, is now being tried at the Wimbledon Sewage Farm, in England. The first operation consists in pouring milk of lime or freshly-slaked lime liquefied, and herring brine into the sewage as it flows into the works. The liquid then passes into a pit up well, where a thorough mixing takes place, after which it is pumped to a higher level, whence it flows into immense tanks. Here the sludge settles and is run into large cakes. These are afterward dried in the sun or a slightly-heated kiln and ground for a fertilizer. The sewage thus purified is completely sterilized, deodorized, and, when mixed with ten times its volume of water, harmless to fish.

The Argentine Republic has 80,000,000 sheep, or twice as many as the United States, but the number of horned cattle is placed at 20,000,000, while we have nearly 50,000,000. There has been a great depression in the value of cattle, owing to the falling off in the demand for dried or "jerked" beef. The government now proposes to encourage the beef interest by guaranteeing 5 per cent. interest annually for ten years on the capital employed in the business of exporting beef either in the fresh state or preserved. The details of this attractive inducement to foreigners are given by Consul Baker in report No. 104 from the United States Department of State. Mr. Baker does not think that even this stimulus will have any perceptible effect upon the export cattle business of our country, because of the inferior quality of Argentine beef.

England has finally consolidated her various agricultural efforts under the management of a Board of Agriculture, presided over by a Minister of Agriculture. To this office Hon. Henry Chaplin has been appointed. He is a popular country gentleman, and said to be a practical agriculturist. With him is associated Sir James Caird, who has had charge of the agricultural work of the privy council. The secretary is Lieutenant Colonel C. A. Leach. The new department is to have its headquarters in one of the Government buildings in Whitehall, London. The appropriation for its support is as follows: Salaries and wages, $63,000; traveling expenses, $10,000; collecting statistics, $47,000; grants in aid of agricultural and dairy schools, $25,000; incidental expenses, $2500. The work of the land commission and on public works and building is also transferred to the new department.

Farming in Paraguay seems to have gone backward, for the area of cultivated lands is now less than it was twenty-five years ago. The government is now making great effort to encourage immigration and the development of her agricultural and other resources. It offers free passage to each family of agriculturists from Europe to the capital, Asuncion, lodging and board for five days upon arrival, free transportation to the final destination and a free gift of thirty-two acres of land, with the necessary implements and seeds and four head of cattle. The public lands are also offered at very low prices, ranging from $70 to $840 (United States money) per square league of 4500 acres, according to location. The terms of payment are very easy, but no one person can buy more than 100 square leagues, nor have more frontage then ten leagues on a navigable river. All kinds of cattle do well, but the country is too hot for sheep. Tobacco and other semitropical crops grow perfectly.—American Agriculturist for January.

PROFIT ON FIGS.

John S. Dore has an abiding faith in the utility of fig culture in this county, and he proposes to go largely into the business next season. He has just balanced his accounts on last season's fig crop and the result is more than favorable. He has seventeen 4 year old trees of the White Adriatic variety, which he bought from the Fancher Creek nursery. These trees were planted very close together at the rate of 126 to the acre. He sold 116 pounds of dried figs to Meade & Co. at 6 cents a pound and a lot of poorly cured ones at 3 cents a pound. The best he put up in one pound cartoons and sold them at 25 cents.

The yield of his crop from seventeen trees at the prices he obtained represents an income of $711 90 from a single acre of four year old trees. He is now an enthusiast on fig culture.

He did very well with half an acre of raisin grapes four years old, at the present time. Two years ago he received $12 for the crop, one year ago he received $90 and this year he received $130—equal to $260 for an acre of raisin grapes.

This is no boom article. Mr. Dore is a man of standing in the community, a member of the grand jury, and has the receipts and other vouchers to verify his statements.—Fresno Republican.

SEED SOWING.

There are few good sowers of seeds. To buy seeds and to cover them with earth comprise the sum of practice with many people, and failure to get the most from seeds means more than the loss of the seeds themselves, for it is indication of general incompetence or shiftlessness. To sow well is the first operation to acquire in gardening; propagation by cuttings is the second.

Two or three general rules are fully as important as many of the explicit instructions: (1) Do not be in a hurry. In all my teaching how to sow it is necessary to make this the important point. It means taking an abundance of time to prepare soil and to provide proper conditions. Ten seeds well sown are more valuable than fifty half sown, and as a rule, the more valuable the plants to be grown the more imperative is this rule. (2) Avoid short cuts, which are wholly artificial. In all the long catalogue of compounds devised to hasten germination I do not know one which is worth its cost or trouble. It is always legitimate to hasten germination, but it must be done by perfecting natural or normal conditions. (3) In cases of doubt as to the proper method of handling rare or choice seeds sow in installments, at intervals. This means experiment. With practice comes an almost intuitive faculty to determine at once what are the proper methods of dealing with seeds with which we have never had any experience. But until this faculty comes safety demands caution. And some people never acquire the faculty. The gardeners of my acquaintance are comparatively few to whom I would intrust an entire sample of strange seeds from another region; not because I could do better with them, but I can learn from a few how to handle many. I once failed completely in an attempt to grow weak seeds of a couple of species, although the year after, profiting by failure, I secured an abundance of fine plants from the same samples.

Seed sowing comprises three distinct subjects: (1) Selection of the seed; (2) treatment of the seed preparatory to sowing; (3) the sowing itself. The commonest cause of failure in seed sowing is too much moisture. This is particularly true in old and weak seeds, which are quickly killed by much wetting. Seeds from remote parts of the world, or which I have reason to suppose possess low vitality, are never watered directly. —L. H. Bailey in Garden and Forest.

"Brown's Bronchial Troches" are excellent for the relief of Hoarseness or Sore Throat. They are exceedingly effective." —Christian World, London, Eng.

MR. CATFISH.

HOW MR. BUMBLEBEE GOT LEFT OUT.

The Carnival—Scenes and Incidents—The Man of the South and the Man From the North.

By Virginia de Vere.

PART I.

It was the day before Mardi Gras, and the city of New Orleans wore its gayest holiday attire. The air was soft and warm, although early in March, and the sun shone brightly on the thousands of happy people who thronged the streets, bent on enjoying to the utmost these days of the carnival. All along broad Canal street, that divides the French quarter from the American, extra props had been placed under the balconies to stand the strain of the many eager feet. Every window, every nook and corner was fast filling, for Rex had at last arrived, had left the river and was making his way through the city. The head of the procession soon appeared, with waving banners, prancing horses, and with gay strains of a noisy brass band, but when Rex himself was observed approaching the air was rent with shouts loud and long, "King of the Carnival" he certainly was as he sat there in his grand barouche, drawn by six snow white horses, surrounded by his knights and jesters, chamberlains, outriders, and throng of merry maskers in every conceivable attire, gay, fantastic, weird, and ridiculous. The light hearted, pleasure loving populace greeted him with noisy applause, and their shouts were quickly responded to by the maskers from their station on the huge floats drawn by four horses, and flowers and bonbons were thrown with great gusto. The members of the "Pickwick Club" had thrown open their beautiful rooms on this day to their wives, children, sweethearts, sisters, and friends in general; and the wide halls, balconies, and windows were filled with the elite of New Orleans society, and many strangers from all parts of the great Union, nearly every State being represented. Most of the front seats were occupied by bright-faced children attended by their black nurses, a few of whom still wore the old time head handkerchiefs.

Many hearts beat high with pleasure on this bright day, but few had caught more thoroughly the spirit of the Carnival than Cherry Delaney as she leaned from one of the balustrades, smiling down on the passing throng. She was a tall, slight, girl of twenty, straight and lithe as a willow wand; one was struck at once by her more than usual grace, the carriage of the proud little head was perfect and the poise of the hips, and small rounded waist worthy of a young Venus, or Psyche. She had that clear, pale, skin peculiar to the Southern girl, but it was not an unhealthy pallor, and the dark gray eyes sparkled with fun and mischief. A turn of a graceful neck revealed straight brows, regular features and a small rather full red mouth, altogether it was a face pleasant to look upon, happy, riant sweet and innocent as the bunch of violets nestling at her bosom. Left an orphan at an early age this young girl had grown up under the care of her widowed aunt, Mrs. Alexander Page, who lived in one of those old fashioned houses found on St. Charles street. The girl could but faintly remember her own home, on the great plantation up the river; she had a dim recollection of her tall, handsome father, and her delicate Creole mother with great, sad eyes. "Marguerite" she had been christened, but the little mother liked to call her baby "Ma Cherie," and the old nurse, Aunt Rachael, and the other house servants had quickly caught the idea, and "Miss Cherry" she was ever after called. A glance at her small, red mouth convinced one that the name was not inappropriate. One dreadful day the steamer bearing her father and mother home from one of their short trips to New Orleans, was sunk just three miles from their plantation. No trace of the young couple was found for some days; at last their bodies were discovered clasped in each other's arms, tangled in the long grass and weeds on the river bank. Mrs. Page was summoned in haste, and took her brother's orphan home to her sheltering arms. No children of her own gladdened her stately home, with its big, hospitable rooms, and she clung to the little gray eyed child, showering on her all the love, devotion, and care that a mother might have given. It was somewhat of a mystery to people in general why Cherry was not completely spoiled, but somehow she was not, and she grew up a sweet, loving girl, beloved by all who knew her.

This had been her first winter in society, with its snares, its delusions, its rose colored spectacles, but what a season of happiness it had been! how far ahead of the wildest dreams! She had been declared a "success" from her debut party, and one wild whirl of gayety had followed; dinners, germans, luncheons, balls, and receptions, thick and fast they came, and now Lent was approaching, and all thought was centered on the grand Mardi Gras ball, given by Proteus and his gallant Krewe at the Opera House. It was the last large affair of the season, the winding up of all gayety until after Easter.

Mrs. Page, who had been a belle in her girlhood, rejoiced over her niece's little triumphs, living over again the days of her youth and entering into all Cherry's plans with deep interest, ever ready to advise, sympathize, and warn. She looked a thorough woman of the world as she leaned back in her cane chair, holding to her near sighted blue eyes a pair of tortoise shell lorgnettes; her kindly face bore traces of great beauty, the thick masses of her iron gray hair were gathered back under a perfect little French bonnet, her long suede gloves fitted without a wrinkle, one was sure the hands underneath were white, perhaps sparkling with rings, the nails pink, and beautifully kept.

The last notes of music were dying away and people began slowly to scatter.

"Auntie, shall we go?" said Cherry, touching Mrs. Page gently on the shoulder.

"Yes, child, we must be moving if we want to reach home today." She rose with that graceful, languid movement so peculiar to Southern women, and together they strolled toward the great staircase, fast filling with people crowding down from all sides. Many friends and acquaintances were encountered on the way, none of whom were in the slightest hurry, so that quite a little time elapsed before they finally escaped the crush and reached the sidewalk. As they did so two young men, standing on the steps of the Louisiana Club house, caught sight of them and came eagerly forward.

They were exactly the same height, with strong, well knit figures, but Allyn Fairfax, with his smooth-shaven, dark complexioned face, steel blue eyes, and close cropped black hair, was a contrast to his friend, Loris Noble of Boston. The latter wore a heavy brown mustache, and his skin, bronzed by exposure to the sun, glowed with a ruddy color, and a pair of very earnest, dark brown eyes looked out from under rather thick brows. It was not such a keen, clever, interesting face as the first, but infinitely more winning, sympathetic and responsive. The two men greeted the ladies cordially, and all four stood on the street corner, chatting and laughing over the procession and the usual small nothings that make up light society conversation. Loris noted the air of possession with which Allyn relieved Cherry of her white sun umbrella, holding it over her with an easy familiarity, and a jealous pang shot through his heart as he noticed the bright color rising to her cheeks under the glance of Allyn's bold eyes. Unable to gaze longer on this tete-a-tete he gave an impatient sigh, turning to Mrs. Page with some commonplace remark. Her quick eyes, however, had observed the expression of his face, and she shook her head with a knowing smile, saying, "The world does not wag very well with somebody today."

Loris felt a trifle annoyed that his face should so completely give him away, but he liked and admired Mrs. Page, most young men did.

"You're quite right. My sky is leadened today, raining cats, dogs, and Angora goats, but it must, it shall clear up, and then I'm coming straight to tell you all about."

"Very well, when you have battled successfully with cats, dogs and Angora goats, I shall expect to see you."

A small car standing on the street corner prepared to move off. Everbody in New Orleans uses the cars, for the streets are not such as would make driving very comfortable, so Mrs. Page signaled to Cherry that they had better avail themselves of this opportunity to return home. As soon as they were lost to sight the two men turned back and entered the club house.

"Come in and have a cigar," said Allyn.

"Thanks, no, I won't smoke," Loris said. He hesitated an instant, glancing at his watch. "But I'll go in, for I must send off a note at once."

Seated at the long table he drew paper and envelopes toward him and was soon scratching away, while Allyn strolled into the smoking room, humming a tune below his breath. He picked up a match to light his cigar, when he suddenly stopped short. An odd expression swept over his keen face and a quick fire burned in his steel blue eyes. He threw the match from him and hastened back to the table where Loris was seated and catching up pen and paper began to write. Ere he had penned three lines the door opened and the messenger that Loris had summoned to deliver his note appeared.

"Hold on a minute," cried Allyn as the man turned to go; "You can take this, too," but his sleeve caught awkwardly on the polished top of the brass inkstand, upsetting it, and sending a stream of ink half way across the page. With a muttered exclamation he added, "Never mind, I must rewrite this." Fifteen minutes later the note was finished and on its way, and he returned to enjoy his cigar and join in the lively conversation going on between Loris and two young cotton merchants.

Allyn Fairfax was a lawyer, and destined to be a successful one. He was not a hard worker, being of too easy going a temperament for that, but he had the priceless faculty of seizing and making the most of opportunities. He was besides a self reliant man and inspired confidence in his clients. He had graduated with honor from a Northern law college, and then gone abroad for a year's rest and pleasure, and it was here that he had first met Loris Livingstone Noble of Boston. The two men were totally unlike in disposition and appearance, but they had tastes enough in common to render traveling together congenial, and being strangers in a strange land they agreed to join forces and "do" the south of Europe together. When at last the delightful holiday drew to a close they returned to New York on the same steamer. Then Allyn went South and took up his profession at the bar in New Orleans, and Loris, after a brief visit with his mother and sister Eleanor in Boston, sped away to Arizona and, being a civil engineer, was soon hard at work constructing bridges and dams. So two years flew by, and now fate threw them together, for Loris had business in the South that detained him all winter and he had seen much of his old traveling companion. Little thought either of them as they stood together on this bright day that that same fate was soon to widely separate them, and so snap the links of friendship that nothing could ever mend. In the meantime Cherry and Mrs. Page wound round Tivoli Circle and out St. Charles street a long distance, at last stopping in front of a large two story white house with a broad gallery surrounded by Doric columns and wide hallway running through the center. It stood back far from the street, and the straight walk leading to the old fashioned, hospitable looking door, was shaded by two beautiful magnolia trees with their rich foliage, but it was a little early for the fragrant, creamy flowers. A high iron fence shut out the garden from the street, and in response to Cherry's quick ring at the gong bell a trim negro servant came out with the key and proceeded to unlock the gate and usher them in, it being the custom in New Orleans for the bells to be placed on the gate instead of the front door.

"Any letters, Felix?" asked Mrs. Page.

"De mail ain't done come yit, Miss Page."

"Oh, dear," cried Cherry, "I'm so disappointed. I certainly expected something by this time! I can't see why there should be so much mystery about the ball tomorrow night. Of course we all know perfectly well that all the nicest men in New Orleans belong to the Porteous Krewe and anybody who is anybody is going to the ball, but this mysterious way of inviting girls to the first dance is absurd. Emily Mehle told me she had received a note this morning from Mr. Draconlle asking for the first dance. I only wish we could go masked too."

"But it is not the custom," broke in her aunt. "In my day we girls always thought that was half the fun to go whirling off with someone, and to try and guess by some peculiarity who it was. It is always an honor to be asked beforehand for the opening quadrille, and unless I am very much mistaken, you will dance it. It is still a long time till tomorrow night."

The announcement of luncheon put a stop to the conversation at that moment, but while they were discussing the shrimp salad, a loud ring sent Felix in haste to open the gate. He soon appeared with a silver salver, on which was a note for Cherry. The writing was disguised and it contained the following words:

"Mr. Catfish begs that Miss Delaney will honor him with the first dance at the Proteus Ball tomorrow evening."

New Orleans, March 7, 188—.

Cherry pushed the note across the table, her heart beating with excitement. It was not such an absurd custom after all. She hastened into the library to pen a reply; she had hardly sealed it and sent it on its way when a second ring was heard and a second note appeared. This was worded almost as the first, only beginning:

"Mr. Bumblebee hopes that Miss Delaney will favor him, etc."

"This is rather provoking," laughed Cherry. "I might prefer Mr. Bumblebee to Mr. Catfish, but he is doomed to disappointment," and he most certainly was disappointed half an hour later, when the messenger returned and the word "regrets" met his eager eye.

Later, as they were seated in the little morning room, the girl turned over the notes wistfully. "I'm sure the first is from Mr. Fairfax, of course he has tried to disguise the writing, but those "y's" and t's" look too familiar to me." Mrs. Page scanned the writing through her glasses.

"I shouldn't be surprised," was her verdict, "and I hope it is. He's a splendid fellow, child, has talent, money, position, and would make a most excellent husband. Youth passes so quickly, make the most of your opportunities when they come. I don't believe any girl would ever regret marrying Allyn Fairfax."

Somehow these words did not strike the girl pleasantly, she looked up rather surprised with a dull pain through her heart. Seeing her pet terrier "Sancho" in the hall, she made an excuse to leave the room, and catching him up in her arms, she ran lightly up stairs to her own room. It was a pretty little place, all hung in blue and white, with a polished floor, rugs, a carved white bed, an open fire place, and, in the corner, near a large window, a divan full of silk pillows. On this she threw herself.

"Oh, Sancho, what do you thing of it?" she whispered, looking down into his bright eyes twinkling through his shaggy hair. He ran out his little red rose leaf tongue and whined as if in answer, then seeing a comfortable spot between two cushions he settled down for a nap, half expecting to be turned out for such familiarity, but his sweet young mistress was in another mood, and leaned back, her hands clasped behind her head, a cloud settling on the face that had been so bright that morning. She pondered on her aunt's words, turning them over and over. She liked Mr. Fairfax well enough, the families were old friends, and he had been very kind and attentive and had done much to make her first season a success; but there was a gleam in his steel blue eyes and a sort of masterful way that always made her draw back. Sometimes in her gay moods she would try to flirt with him, but he had a way of taking her coquetries in such dead earnest that she soon gave that up and tried the friendly role. So far that seemed to succeed very well. Of late her thoughts had been occupied with Mr. Noble. How well she remembered the first night they met. It was at a small card party. She was sitting talking to several men when she looked up, seeing her hostess advance with this tall stranger. His manly face and earnest brown eyes took her fancy at once. In the drawing for partners it was her fortune to play with him. He had brought letters to many of the old families and been quite extensively entertained, but somehow he did not "take" among the light-hearted Southern girls. He was too dignified, too quiet, to attract most of them. Emily Mehle, one of the belles in this particular set, was wont to shake her curls and remark: "You can never tell about these quiet men. No doubt he has a sweetheart up North. I for one shall not waste any time on him"; and so it happened that Cherry was the only girl that seemed to draw him out, and make those brown eyes dance with fun. She discovered that he had an unusually sweet barytone voice, and, both being very fond of music, they had spent many pleasant evenings together. She glanced up at the mirror, strung around, girl fashion, with bells, ribbons, bonbonbiers, and other trophies of the "german," and the favors he had given her held very conspicuous places. She touched them almost lovingly, smiling at the gay scenes they recalled.

"After all I like him better than all the others, she thought, but perhaps, as Emily says, he has a sweetheart up North, and I'm only wasting my time."

To be continued next Saturday.

Rosslyn Croaner had his sister Jane, better known as "Jubilee Jane", on account of her continual singing, arraigned before the committee of examiners this morning in order to have her adjudged insane. The first question she answered properly, which was this. "If you were going away, Jane what would be the first thing you would do?" The ready answer was. Perhaps no local disease has puzzled and baffled the medical profession more than usual catarrh. While not immediately fatal it is among the most distressing and disgusting ills the flesh is heir to, and the records show very few or no cases of radical cure of chronic catarrh by any of the multitude of modes of treatment until the introduction of Ely's Cream Balm a few years ago. The success of this preparation has been most gratifying and surprising.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp proof. It is fire, fall and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that, ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a lifetime, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered, on its merit of cheapness only.

THE COMING EPISCOPAL ELECTION.

The Pastor of the Universalist Church Re-elected — Subjects of Tomorrow's Sermons.

"Very naturally every one is thinking about the coming episcopal election, as to who would be a good man for the holy office, who is being spoken of or who is likely to be elected. Let it be borne in mind that first of all, that the convention should be very unlike a political convention; that it should seek simply to know and record the choice of the Holy Spirit. It will, of course, be a proper use of the faculties God has given us to have the matter under reverent and prayerful consideration, making inquiries, etc., with a view to being able to act intelligently in the discharge of our personal responsibility when we come together in the special convention. Let us keep our minds free from prejudice, or from being made up in interest of any one, else we cannot yield ourselves to the guidance of the Holy Ghost when we are met together."

The First Universalist Parish of Oakland held its annual meeting and election of officers Monday evening, January 13th. The treasurer's report showed the parish to be in a good financial condition, having paid all its bills, expended a considerable amount in missionary work, and still having a surplus in the treasury. A steady increase in membership was reported. The various societies auxiliary to the parish reported no indebtedness, with a balance in the treasury. The officers elected for the ensuing year are: Ives Scoville, moderator; Mrs. Clara O. Sunhard, clerk; Leslie Lord, treasurer; George F. Robinson, Mrs. F. L. Hewitt, H. E. Hatch, and Mrs. P. H. Templeton, trustees, the first two elected to serve for two years. Rev. S. Goodenough was unanimously elected to serve as pastor the coming year.

A Question Asked About Locke Richardson's Readings and a Prompt Reply.

A postal card, unsigned, save by a query mark, containing the following matter, was received this morning by the editor of THE TRIBUNE:

JANUARY 17, 1890.

EDITOR TRIBUNE: Can persons attending the Locke-Richardson readings feel assured that the money they pay for tickets will not go to the maintenance, or be used in any way in aid of the Unitarian Society? One of the corner stones of this society is the denial of the divinity of Christ, and also of nearly every other cardinal doctrine of the Christian Church. It is an attempt to reintroduce pagan philosophy. Now, while there is no quarrel with the persons engaged in this work, there is a feeling that it is not proper to strengthen the treasury of a society which aims to uncrown Christ, and to secularize religion. Hence the above question. Respectfully,

The question was referred to the Rev. Charles W. Wendte, the scholarly minister of the Unitarian Society.

Mr. Wendte writes in reply:

"I can understand an opponent's position and thoroughly respect his conscientious scruples, but I have only contempt for an anonymous coward who tries to injure a cause by secretly insinuating his evil thoughts about it. Silence is the best reply to this kind of adversaries, and it is usually my course toward them. I am continually beset with anonymous contributions warning me to 'flee from the wrath to come,' to 'confess Christ,' etc. Tracts are left at my door by well meaning but mistaken persons, and in their orisons I am doubtless often remembered.

"Since THE TRIBUNE however desires an answer let me say that the Starr King Fraternity is a literary and social organization connected with the Unitarian church, but without any credal or sectarian limitations. Many of its members belong to orthodox churches, and religious or political subjects are avoided in our discussions. John P. Irish is president and Judge Charles N. Fox, vice president. The club disposes of its own funds and if it is public spirited enough to give the people the benefit of its entertainments the latter have certainly no cause to complain.

"I should certainly not abstain from the good lectures and concerts in the First Congregational Church or the First Methodist Church because directly or indirectly they encourage a form of faith I do not hold. I am rather thankful for the many opportunities they give me to enjoy and improve myself. And this, it seems to me, is the sensible and right view to take of the matter.

Respectfully,
C. W. WENDTE.

WILL BE COMPROMISED.

The Contest in the Mowry Estate to Be Dismissed.

When the contest in the estate of Origin Mowry, deceased, is called before Judge Ellsworth in the Superior Court next Tuesday it will probably be dismissed, as the attorneys and parties have agreed to compromise the case. It is stated that Mrs Graybill will receive more than $20,000. Mrs. Mowry and her children will be allowed to remain in possession of the property deeded to them, which is valued at $200,000. Joseph C. Mowry will remain in the position of administrator of his father's estate, and the charges made against him will be dismissed.

In this important case several attorneys were engaged. Ex-Judge J. F. Sullivan and Matt Sullivan, his brother, represented Mrs. Graybill. The administrator's attorneys are Frank Otis, who sailed for Europe about six weeks ago, James E. Simmons and A. A. Moore. The heirs, Mrs. Delina Mowry, widow of Origin Mowry, and two sons, Marion L. and Fred W. are represented by Joseph Hutchinson and Donald Y. Campbell in the matter of the estate, while in three suits now brought by Annie Ann Graybill, respectively, against Delina Mowry, Marion Mowry and Fred Mowry, if the cases come to trial D. M. Delmas would be associated with Messrs. Hutchinson and Campbell.

Mr. Simmons was called into the case in December last and A. A. Moore was engaged on Tuesday of this week. Mr. Simmons, in speaking about the compromise said very positively that the compromise was not sought or offered by the administrator, who was prepared to fight the case and to disprove the charges made by Mrs. Graybill against the administrator and also against his attorney, Frank Otis, who is now out of the State.

A ONE STORY MARKET.

The Building E. C. Sessions Will Erect on Twelfth Street.

It has been reported that the Masons are not desirous of having a market built on the lot between their building and that of the Young Men's Christian Association as is contemplated by E. C. Sessions, and it is said a proposition is on foot to buy out Mr. Sessions' lease to the ground, and also purchase the property from the present owner. Mr. Sessions stated this morning that he knew of no such intention on the part of the Masons. He had hired the ground and intended to build the market, the excavation for the basement being already completed. He supposed some would like to see a four story stone and pressed brick building on that lot, but he had hired the ground and intends to build a one story structure. Of course he would have to build of stone and brick, as the property is within the fire limits, but a one story building would answer his purposes very well. The one floor will be divided off into stalls, after the fashion of the City Market, and the building will have a glass roof.

HOUSE FOR HOMELESS YOUNG WOMEN.

An Interesting Story by an Eloquent Man to a Wretchedly Small Audience.

Owing to the severe rainstorm last night less than two dozen people attended the services at St. Paul's Church, at the conclusion of which the rector, Rev. Hobart Chetwood introduced Rev. J. Sanders Reed, the new rector of Trinity Church in San Francisco, recently from the East, who explained something of the workings of a society which had met with much success in the Eastern cities, known as the "Girls' Friendly Society." THE TRIBUNE prints the remarks of the reverend gentleman tonight, as they are of great interest and worthy of attention. If the masses will not go to church the papers will take a part of the church to the masses.

In the beginning he said that everyday we are brought to realize more of the brotherhood of men. There was a time after the Reformation when the individual was emphasized, but today we are reminded that men are saved by saving others, and that after all there is what might be called social salvation.

For nearly fifty years back every city and town of any importance in this country has had Young Men's Christian Association rooms where young men can find comfort and cheer. But nothing of the sort has ever been provided for young women or girls who have to work, many of whom have to go to cheerless homes where there is nothing to do and no enjoyment of any kind. And for these women in our larger cities there is really nothing for them but to wander about the streets in search of those who will help them to wile away the dreary hours. In the city of Newark, N. J., whence the speaker came, he said the streets had been filled with thousands of girls and women who spent most of their time until midnight indulging in noise and mirth, knowing that at home there was really nothing for them but poverty and suffering.

About fifteen years ago an archbishop in London conceived An idea that something ought to be done for those women and girls, and his wife began plans for the organization of a girls' friendly society, which were soon completed. The Queen was persuaded to become the first president of the organization, and letters were sent throughout the country asking the co-operation of the Bishops and rectors in the different dioceses, and in the due course of time the society had crossed the waters and come to our own country. In the diocese of Newark alone there are perhaps eight or twelve parochial branches of that society, and the speaker had an opportunity to watch its growth and the good which resulted therefrom.

In Newark work was commenced about five years ago, and at the first meeting there were only three women and five or seven girls in attendance. The society had no place to hold its meetings save the chapel, and there they met until in a few weeks it became necessary for the organization to have a home of its own, and a clubhouse was hired for the girls. The house was rented for $25 a month, and comfortably furnished. The gardens were filled with choice plants and flowers, a croquet ground and tennis court were made on the lawn, and at the end of the first year the society numbered some seventy-five girls and fifteen ladies and the growth of these poor working girls toward refinement was remarkable. When they first entered the house the girls were wild and boisterous and rushed through the rooms as if they were the owners of the house, but after a year they became refined, quiet and modest.

Bible classes were formed and many came to church and the work grew so that at the end of two years it was decided to buy a house in the center of the city. A three story house was secured with sixteen or eighteen rooms. In the parlors were a piano and books, and other rooms down stairs were fitted up as reading rooms and with games. Up stairs rooms were used for quilting bees, the Bible class, dressmaking rooms and bedrooms, the last named under the control of the matron. This building and the ground it was on became the property of the society at the end of three years or so, and the expenses of the house were not more than three or four hundred dollars a year.

When he had been called to San Francisco he felt that if there was one thing above all others that he could not leave it was the Girls' Friendly Home. He had seen the organization grow from three girls to over 200.

The point now is whether it is possible to establish a branch of this English Girls' Friendly Society in this city. It is almost everywhere that the Church of England is known. If such a thing is needed in Oakland he would explain the best means of proceeding.

He suggested that there be called a meeting of the ladies of the church who desire to join. The ladies are known as "associates," and the girls are called members. No members are admitted who are younger than 13 years of age, and their membership ceases when they get married. No girl who is not virtuous is admitted. The ladies of the church might meet and organize and divide the city into districts, and each "associate" might take a district. Then let them canvass the city for girls. A great many girls would be found, but many of them would not be willing to come, thinking that the place is only for the poor girls.

Each girl is assigned to some "associate" who watches over her like a Sunday school teacher and becomes her friend who takes a kindly Christian interest in her. Each associate might have fifteen or twenty girls. Then there should be a regular night for meeting at the house. In Newark they had Fridays, and it was of the utmost importance that the rector should be there too, so that the girls would get to know him and like him. He had noticed that the enthusiasm decreased on nights when the rector was absent. A portion of the evening should be devoted to worship and the rest to social enjoyment. On Good Friday evening the annual gathering was held.

It was found essential to set them at work, so quilting bees were organized and large numbers of quilts were made and sold, the proceeds going to help the home. Then boxes were filled for the missionaries. Once a month the girls gave an entertainment to the associates and the next month the associates gave an entertainment to the girls. On other nights magic lantern exhibitions would be given, and another Friday would be taken by a lady physician who would come to tell the girls something about their health and how to care for themselves.

Then it was found that a number of the girls did not know how to cook a good dinner, or how to make a fair supper, so Tuesday nights were given up to the cooking classes. Then on another night a class in millinery was instructed by a prominent milliner in this city. Then a lady dressmaker was engaged, and came once a week on another night to teach the girls dressmaking, and in that way the girls were kept busy.

The house was not called "a home" for fear of hurting the feelings. Neither was it called a "retreat" or an "asylum," but simply their house.

The house was supported from various sources. The vestrymen of his parish gave him permission to supply the funds collected on Easter morning to the house. Then two rooms were rented in the house to a worthy woman for a nominal sum. Besides this the girls were given one cent each and were allowed to invest it as they saw fit, the proceeds going to the support of the home. As an illustration, one girl bought a lemon and made a glass of lemonade, which she sold for five cents. With that she purchased a doll and dressed it, and obtained twenty-five cents for it and soon she had $5 made from that one cent piece.

As to the work of the men, he said a man was never allowed in the house except once a year, when the annual meetings were held, and then they always invited the men. But the men were made to part with their coin by making them honorary members for twelve months upon the payment of $5.

Before joining the society a girl became a candidate for one month, during which she was visited by her associate. The girls were assessed 2 cents a month and the associates paid 5 cents. The speaker closed by saying that he would be pleased to say more of the Girls' Friendly Society to any who might ask information of him.

THE STATE UNIVERSITY.

Where Wells Could Be Sunk to Increase the Supply of Water.

The Librarian's catalogue will at only appear.

The University Register is still behind hand.

Wheeler, '91, will be manager of the Students' Co-operative Association next year.

Booth, '88, who is now in New Orleans, inspired the football game in that city on January 24, between the Yale and the Princeton teams.

E. F. Becht, formerly of the class of '89, died on the 13th inst. at Falkenstein, Saxony, Germany, where he had been pursuing the study of music.

The sophomore class has decided to hold a "hop" immediately after the "exes." If some manner of lighting the gymnasium can be devised it will take place in the evening.

Plans have been prepared for planting trees and shrubbery on the slopes in front of north and south halls, but nothing will be done until the question of a water supply is settled.

A great many of the students attended President Davis's reception last evening at his San Francisco residence. The guests were charmingly entertained by the President and his wife.

During the year 1888-89 numerous additions have been made to the museum in the departments of ethnology, zoology, paleontology, and mineralogy, both by donation and purchase.

The topographical model of the grounds made by some of the students under the direction of Instructor Raymond about a year ago, is now in the secretary's office, and is found of great value for reference.

Professor Hilgard of the Agricultural Department has issued bulletin No. 81 in regard to the distribution of plants and seeds. The work of distribution has been delayed on account of the weather, and those who expected shipments to be made on January 1 were disappointed.

The gymnasium is recently in receipt of a chart entitled "Indian Club Exercises by Note." By a very simple system the different movements are indicated on the chart in much the same manner as the notes on the musical scale. This will greatly simplify the work of the instructor and insure better work by the classes. The gymnasium has lately received a number of new appliances for developing muscular collegians.

The report of Secretary Bonte has a deal of valuable information, particularly for the regents. As to the water supply, he says:

"There are four points on our grounds where wells could be sunk with great advantage.

1. On the bank of Strawberry Creek, in the southeast corner, made by our wire fence.

2. On the north boundary of the University site, in the bend made by the old Felton road.

3. At a point where the northern affluent of Strawberry Creek enters the University grounds.

4. On the flank of the hill southwest of the University barn.

All of these wells could be sunk for $5000. The cost of a new pipe system cannot be estimated, even approximated, until we ascertain the direction of our water sources.

I have consulted with many persons who are familiar with the subject, and now present the result of these numerous and long continued investigations."

THE ASSASSINATION.

The Scene in the Theater Where Lincoln Was Killed.

From the "History of Lincoln" by Nicolay and Hay, now drawing to a close in the Century, we quote the following: "No one, not even the comedian on the stage, could ever remember the last words of the piece that were uttered that night— the last Abraham Lincoln heard upon earth. The whole performance remains in the memory of those who heard it a vague phantasmagoria, the actors the thinnest of specters. The awful tragedy in the box makes everything else seem pale and unreal. Here were five human beings in a narrow space—the greatest man of his time, in the glory of the most stupendous success in our history, the idolized chief of a nation dreadly mighty, with illimitable vistas of grandeur to come; his beloved wife, proud and happy; a pair of betrothed lovers, with all the promise of felicity that youth, social position and wealth could give them; and this young actor, handsome as Endymion upon Latmos, the pet of his little world. The glitter of fame, happiness and ease was upon the entire group, but in an instant everything was to be changed with the blinding swiftness of enchantment. Quick death was to come on the central figure of the company—the central figure, we believe, of the great and good men of the century. Over all the best the blackest fates hovered menacingly—fates from which a mother might pray that kindly death would save her children in their infancy. One was to wander with the stain of murder on his soul, with the curses of a world upon his name, with a price set upon his head, in frightful physical pain, till he died a dog's death in a burning barn; the stricken wife was to pass the rest of her days in melancholy and madness; of those two young lovers, one was to slay the other, and then end his life a raving maniac.

"The murderer seemed to himself to be taking part in a play. The fumes of brandy and partisan hate had for weeks kept his brain in a morbid state. He felt as if he were playing Brutus off the boards; he posed, expecting applause. Folding a pistol in one hand and a knife in the other he opened the box door, put the pistol to the President's head and fired; dropping the weapon, he took the knife in his right hand, and when Major Rathbone sprang to seize him he struck savagely at him. Major Rathbone received the blow on his left arm, suffering a wide and deep wound. Booth, rushing forward, then placed his left hand on the railing of the box and vaulted lightly over to the stage. It was a high leap, but nothing to such a trained athlete. He was in the habit of introducing what actors call sensational leaps in his plays. In 'Macbeth,' where he met the weird sisters, he leaped from a rock twelve feet high. He would have got safely away but for his spur catching in the folds of the Union flag, with which the front of the box was draped. He fell on the stage, the torn flag trailing on his spur, but instantly rose as if he had received no hurt, though in fact the fall had broken his leg, turning to the audience, brandishing his dripping knife and shouting the State motto of Virginia, 'Sic Semper Tyrannis,' and fled rapidly across the stage and out of sight. Major Rathbone had shouted, 'Stop him!' The cry went out, 'He has shot the President.' From the audience, at first stupid with surprise and afterwards wild with excitement and horror, two or three men jumped upon the stage in pursuit of the flying assassin; but he ran through the familiar passages, leaped upon his horse, which was in waiting in the alley behind, rewarded with a kick and a curse the call-boy who had held him, and rode rapidly away in the light of the just risen moon.

"The President scarcely moved; his head drooped forward slightly, his eyes closed. Major Rathbone, at first not regarding his own grievous hurt, rushed to the door of the box to summon aid. He found it barred, and on the outside some one was beating and clamoring for entrance. He opened the door; a young officer named Crawford entered; one or two army surgeons soon followed, who hastily examined the wound. It was at once seen to be mortal. It was afterwards ascertained that a large derringer bullet had entered the back of the head on the left side, and, passing through the brain, had lodged just behind the left eye. By direction of Rathbone and Crawford, the President was carried to a house across the street and laid upon a bed in a small room at the rear of the hall, on the ground floor. Mrs. Lincoln followed, half distracted, tenderly cared for by Miss Harris. Rathbone, exhausted by loss of blood, fainted, and was carried home. Messengers were sent for the members of the Cabinet, for the Surgeon General, for Dr. Stone, the President's family physician; a crowd of people rushed instinctively to the White House, and, bursting through the doors, shouted the dreadful news to Robert Lincoln and Major Hay, who sat gossiping in an upper room. They ran downstairs. Finding a carriage at the door they entered it to go to Tenth street. As they were driving away a friend came up and told them that Mr. Seward and most of the Cabinet had been murdered. The news was all so improbable that they could not help hoping it was all untrue. But when they got to Tenth street and found every thoroughfare blocked by the swiftly gathering thousands, agitated by tumultuous excitement, they were prepared for the worst. In a few minutes all who had been sent for, and many others, were gathered in the little chamber where the Chief of the State lay in his agony. His son was met at the door by Dr. Stone, who with grave tenderness informed him that there was no hope. After a natural outburst of grief, young Lincoln devoted himself the rest of the night to soothing and comforting his mother.

"The President had been shot a few minutes before 10 o'clock. The wound would have brought instant death to most men, but his vital tenacity was extraordinary. He was, of course, unconscious from the first moment, but he breathed with slow and regular respiration throughout the night. As the dawn came, and the lamplight grew pale in the fresher beams, his pulse began to fail, but his face even then was scarcely more haggard than those of the sorrowing group of statesmen and generals around him. His automatic moaning, which had continued through the night, ceased; a look of unspeakable peace came upon his worn features. At twenty-two minutes after seven he died. Stanton broke the silence by saying, 'Now he belongs to the ages.' Dr. Gurley kneeled by the bedside and prayed fervently. The widow came in from the adjoining room, supported by her son, and cast herself with loud outcry on the dead body."

A CHINESE SPORT.

The Heavy Expense of a Very Fast Life.

TOM SUE BANKRUPTS HIS FIRM.

A Loan of $7500 From a Collateral Bank of San Francisco on $480 Worth of Opium.

San Francisco Examiner.

On the 8th of last November the Chinese business community was very much astonished to learn that the firm of Sun Wo Tai & Co. was in financial trouble.

It was a heavy house and dealt extensively in silks, and was rated among the hundreds of thousands of dollars by the local bankers, with whom they had extensive dealings.

The affairs of the house have been in the hands of a receiver and the doors are still closed, although it is understood that an arrangement has been entered into with the creditors whereby the firm will at once resume business.

Just after the failure one of the partners, named Tom Sue, suddenly departed for China. It was well known in Chinatown that Tom Sue was what is commonly called in this country a "high roller." He was given to gambling and played up to the limit.

It was also a well known fact in Chinatown that he had other expensive habits, and consequently when it leaked out that the festive Tom had absorbed the assets of the firm to the extent of over $25,000, the equivalent of the expression, "I told you so," was freely uttered in Chinese commercial circles.

So sound was the credit of the firm of which Tom Sue was a member that he had no difficulty in raising money outside. The Chinese are known to be the most expert kite flyers in the world, and when it came to financial "kite flying" Tom Sue demonstrated that he was as skillful as any Mexican stock-broker on a Black Friday.

SAMPLED A PREPARED BOX.

Shortly before the failure he applied to the San Francisco Collateral Loan Bank, at 538 Kearny street, managed by Max Goldberg and Duncan McNee, and stated that he was in need of $7500, and as security for the loan he would hypothecate a quantity of opium of the value of $10,000, which he had in a warehouse.

To be on the safe side, the gentlemen loaning the loan office went to the expert of the Anglo-Californian Bank and secured his services to examine the opium and set a value on it.

This was done, and the samples opened at the warehouse satisfied the expert that the loan was a safe one to make, and it was consummated.

In order that there should be no substitution of an inferior grade of opium for that on which the loan was made, the lenders of the money took immediate possession of their security, carted it off to their office on Kearny street, and locked it up safely in their vaults.

Shortly after Tom Sue went to China and the firm failed.

The creditors learned of the transaction, and concluded they would pay off the loan and realize the difference between that amount and the market price of the drug.

They sent one of their number with their opium expert to see that they got the genuine "Rooster Brand" of opium, which is worth about $16 per pound.

After the expert had examined the lot carefully, he announced that it was worth about $500.

GUIDED BY THE HEATHEN.

The surprise and dismay of the managers of the Collateral Loan Bank can well be imagined.

They had it examined again by their own experts, but found it not worth over $500 for the whole lot.

Finally the matter was adjusted by a sale yesterday to the representative of the firm of Sun Wo Tai & Co., for the sum of $480 and an agreement to accept 50 cents on the dollar for the balance of the debt.

When an Examiner reporter called yesterday on the representatives of the Collateral Loan Bank they expressed great surprise that he was in possession of the facts, and denied at first that any such transaction had taken place, but finally admitted that there was something of the kind, but they had not been taken in to the extent of a dollar; in fact, that they had been paid in full.

From the best of authority it is learned that the wily Tom Sue succeeded in imposing a lot of worthless stuff on them, probably some preparation of molasses or a very inferior quality of opium of very little value, and lied him to the Flowery Kingdom with the proceeds, where he is probably teaching his countrymen the beauties of straight flushes and jack pots and occasionally relating between deals what he knows about collateral loan banks.

TWO POISONS,

Coal Gas and Liquor That Intoxicates.

MRS. M. G. C. EDHOLM COMPARES THEM

The Weekly Contribution From the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The asphyxiation by gas of Mrs. Erwin and her two daughters at the Eureka Hotel caused a thrill of horror all through Oakland, only equalled a few months since by the boiler explosion in West Oakland with its sad loss of life. The case was indeed a distressingly sad one. The mother with her four children just arrived from Missouri to join the husband and father in their new California home at Santa Paula, and just on the eve of the glad reunion three of the family are stricken by the grim monster death, and the happy home becomes indeed an abode of desolation. No wonder the entire community is aroused, and the strictest of sanitary measures, to prevent such horrors in the future, are insisted upon by an earnest and aggressive press, backed by the strong voice of public opinion.

No wonder 10,000 hearts in Oakland beat in tender sympathy for the bereaved husband and father, and eyes of strangers dim with tears as they read the terrible news of the disaster in the papers or, visiting the Morgue, gazed upon the unfortunate dead, so ruthlessly cut down in the midst of life. Mothers and fathers clasp their children more warmly in their arms and pray their darlings may be spared to them. Husbands kiss their wives more tenderly, realizing most forcibly that "in the midst of life we are in death." Brothers and sisters are more gentle and thoughtful to each other under the influence of this awful horror.

Intense pity for the husband and father and the remaining children throbs in all hearts, and legions of stranger friends hastened to perform all the loving services, both to the dead and living, to ease the terrible burden of their affliction. What pen can portray their agony or what language measure their sorrow and loss, which will shadow their lives to their dying day. Words cannot depict the pathos of the scene when the stricken husband and father gazed upon the lifeless bodies of his wife and children. The happy memories of the past surged over him in a flood and made the realization of the awful present seem like some terrible nightmare, from whose horrible presence he might escape. Tears and sobs shook his manly frame and checked the utterance in words of his anguish. How his bright dreams were shattered and his fondest hopes turned to the misery of despair because of that accidental tragedy. His home has lost its light, his life has lost its joy.

No less pathetic was the grief of the two sons, and that first Lord's Day in Oakland, in California, the sunset land of flowers and sunshine, will always seem the blackest midnight darkness in their calendar. The utter loneliness of their hearts, what tongue can tell? Strangers in a strange land and three of the little family lying cold in death. No oldentime friends to extend sympathy or dear ones to mourn with them.

And yet their cloud had its silver lining. The dailies rush in the forefront to aid in warm-hearted philanthropy; the suffering and needy had only to send forth the sad story on the white wings of the press, ere the sympathy, and more, the generous deed of a city was roused in behalf of the sorely-stricken family. Friends, no longer strangers, flocked about them, and mingled their tears with tender solicitude and practical kindness. Tender hands robed the bodies for their burial, and the caskets were almost buried under their wealth of flowers. The minister of God spoke words of consolation and of hope, and music soothed their heavy grief.

And yet! and yet! strange as it may seem, there are other deaths in Oakland a thousand times more sad, and the community are as stolid and unmoved as the Egyptian sphinx.

The bars are doing work a thousand times more dreadful than even this deadly gas. They are selling a poison which does not mercifully end the life of the victim in a night, leaving the body untouched by the ravages of disease, and the face smiling even in death, as though heaven's glories were opening up to them—but a poison which as surely, but more slowly, kills. This poison attacks every part of the human organism, and leaves its disgusting marks. It changes the splendid, manly figure to a mass of bloated, diseased flesh. It changes the brilliant eyes to the leer of a drunken idiot or the glitter of a maniac. It transforms the handsomest, most spiritual face into the degraded brutal expression of a criminal or a madman. It takes the grandest brain of the most godlike of men, and day by day with wizard arts, makes the brilliant thought a vapid, senseless nothing. Changes the inspiration which ought to glorify literature or ennoble humanity into the mutterings of a drink crazed brain. Ay! worse and worse, this devilish alcohol, which a hundred saloon keepers are selling to men in Oakland attacks not only the body and the brain, but the higher, better faculties, the soul. It touches the love of wife, of mother, of child, and lo! it is consumed in its weird flame. Marriage vows are forgotten in the wild revelry of licentiousness. The mother heart, which is breaking because of this poison dealt out to her boy, is ruthlessly trampled in the dust. The little child whose very helplessness should appeal to a father's heart, may starve or beg in the street that the father may drink. Honor, tenderness, manliness, are changed to dishonor, cruelty, brutality. A hundred such wrecks are being made in Oakland by our saloons, and when, one by one, their death is recorded by alcoholism, the bar room brawl, the drunken accident, or the disease caused by drink, not a ripple is made upon our society, save here and there by some "temperance fanatic." And then the saloonkeeper points to his license, by which he is authorized by our Government to do just such deadly work, and before the majesty of law we are dumb. Murder is all right if it is done according to law.

The press does not hurry to the rescue of the living as it so grandly did in the case of the gas poison, and demand that the poison shall not thus kill the brightest and best among us, but when the annual death roll of 60,000 drunkards' deaths is forced before their unwelcome vision, they coolly say "You can't prohibit the poisoner. Prohibition don't prohibit." Ah! if there were three victims a year to the gas poison, an indignant community would very soon see if the poisoners could not be stopped in their nefarious work and a little "prison suasion" would make prohibition prohibit.

And who would not a thousand times rather see their loved ones laid cold in death by the fatal gas than by the deadly alcohol? The peaceful death from which their souls floated out into the glorious beyond, ushered them into God's eternal summerland. But the drunkard's death! The heart sickens at the thought! The long years of gradual decline, physical, mental, moral, in which the loved ones watch their darling changing to the degraded, loathsome, obscene, profane man oftentimes see him graduate into a criminal or a tramp, and at last, weary with waiting and watching and praying, see him stagger into a drunkard's grave. Ah! Thomas B. Erwin's sorrow was happiness in compare with theirs. He can speak of his dead with pride and love. But who can remember the dead drunkard in words. Even his mother cannot speak of him for shame, though in her heart of hearts she still pleads, "God be merciful to my boy." She would go into the drunkard's hell to redeem him. Where are the comforting friends to the drunkard's family? Where are the flowers for his coffin, and the loving ministrations of the servant of God as he pictures the immortal glory into which he has entered? Who dares follow the drunkard into eternity in the face of God's word, "No drunkard shall enter the kingdom of heaven"? What choir gives their services and chants sacred music at that funeral, picturing the glad reunion on the other side?

Who raises money for the wants of the needy living and the heartbroken wife and children? Is their sorrow not as great? Is their anguish less sacred?

But the great difference is this, the gas tragedy was an accident, the alcohol tragedy is according to law, and at our next election our bad men—strangely, too, our good men, some of them Christians, will vote to continue this annual killing according to law.

HOW TO CURE A SEVERE COLD.

It may be a surprise to our readers to learn that a severe cold can in many instances be completely cured in one or two days' time. To do this, however, prompt action is necessary. The first symptoms of a cold are a dry, loud cough, a profuse watery discharge from the nose, and a thin, white coating on the tongue. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is taken in double doses every half hour after the first appearance of these symptoms it will counteract the effect of the cold and restore the system to a healthy condition within one or two days' time, in almost every case, and when the cold is not completely cured in this time its severity will be greatly lessened and a complete cure insured in a very short time. When no action towards curing the cold is taken the dry, loud cough is followed by a profuse watery expectoration, and that by a difficulty of breathing, a peculiar tightness of the chest and a slight expectoration of very tough and tenacious mucus. Few persons pay any attention to a cold until in this condition, that is, until the cold has become settled in the system. The first action should be to relieve the lungs. This is best accomplished by the free use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. This Remedy liquids the tongue and tenacious mucus and causes its expulsion from the air cells of the lungs, produces a free expectoration, and opens the secretions. A complete cure soon follows. In some cases, however, several days are required, but the experience of thousands of persons in the use of this remedy has been that it will cure a severe cold in less time than any other treatment and that it leaves the system in a natural and healthy condition. The promptness and certainty of its cures of severe colds has given Chamberlain's Cough Remedy the name of being the best made. For sale by Kirkland & Trowbridge, 973 Broadway.

THE PASSING SHOW

Grand and Comic Opera and Burlesque.

FROM TRAGEDY TO FARCICAL COMEDY.

The Juch Company Will Give Two Operas in Oakland — Howard's "Shenandoah" Coming.

Vernona Jarbeau will play at the Oakland Theater next Monday and Tuesday evenings. She has had a versatile career on the stage, having supported Modjeska in tragedy, been prima donna of the Duff Opera Company and the Max Maretzek Opera Company, has played the part of Evangeline, and finally has decided that farce comedy with a company of her own is the most profitable stage business. She has two farce comedies, "Starlight" and "Strictly Confidential," neither very good in itself, but sufficient for a frame to exhibit Miss Jarbeau as a singer, dancer, and actress, and her company of comedians, singers, and dancers. On Monday evening "Starlight" will be played, and on Tuesday evening "Strictly Confidential."

During the latter part of next week at the Oakland Theater John T. Murphy, the famous Joe Murphy's brother, will play in the Irish character dramas "Shaun Rue" and "Kerry Gow."

The San Francisco Theaters.

The engagement of the Emma Juch Opera Company at the Baldwin Theater, San Francisco, is limited to two weeks, and next week will be the last. Miss Juch will sing at five performances during next week. The arrangement of operas is as follows:

Monday (only time).....Bohemian Girl
Juch as Arline.
Tuesday (last time).....The Postilion
Wednesday.....Faust
Juch as Marguerite.
Thursday.....Mignon
Juch as Mignon.
Friday, Rossini's masterpiece.....
.....William Tell
Juch as Jemmy.
Saturday matinee.....Martha
Saturday evening.....Rigoletto
Juch as Gilda.

Seats now selling for all performances.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings of the week following, the Juch Company will appear at the Oakland Theater. The opera for Monday, the 27th, will be "Faust." Manager Stillwell has not named the opera for Tuesday, the 28th.

Rice & Dixey's "Pearl of Pekin" will continue next week at the new California Theater, Louis Harrison, the excellent comedian, taking the principal part. The music in this opera is exceedingly pleasing, but the dialogue and plot are not too bright to dazzle. The theater is well patronized during this engagement.

At the Grand Opera House next Monday evening Frank Gassaway's military comedy drama, "The Dandy Fifth," will be played for the first time.

Bronson Howard's great play, "Shenandoah," will follow the Juch Opera Company at the Baldwin.

Splinters From the Boards.

Emile Zola's next novel will treat of the French ballet girl and her life behind the wings of the Parisian theaters.

Steele Mackaye's attempt to dramatize "Colonel Tom Ochiltree" presents some curious problems, but none greater than the fact that Nat Goodwin will attempt to act it.

Madame Modjeska is enjoying her holiday vacation. During the past week a musicale was given in her honor at the New York Conservatory of Music and a reception by Mrs. Louis Livingston Seaman.

Henry E. Dixey celebrated his thirty-first birthday on Monday last. His dressing room at the Standard Theater in the evening was filled with presents, including silver toilet sets and other articles of value.

It has just become gossiped about that the Steinways are going to furnish the funds for De Wolf Hopper's Opera Company, which is to astonish theater goers; and that Falk, the photographer, was financially concerned in Miss Julia Marlowe's starring tour.

Once more the female star fails to explain. Miss Mary Anderson says she will not keep her engagements and come to America. Henry E. Abbey says she will. Does anybody for one moment suppose that Miss Anderson is a man, that she should be bound by a contract?

The unfortunate part of this business is that not more than one in fifty of these young women have the smallest artistic ambition or the faintest conception of the duties and labors of a dramatic career. They only know that obscure maidens jump into notoriety and fine dresses on the stage, and are flattered and run after, and get their pictures and their hosiery into the public prints. —New York Truth.

The prevailing "influenza" has been good to some and cruel to others. At Liverpool Miss Viola Clemens (under study) completely eclipsed Miss Grace Hawthorne in the role of Theodora. The critics and public are loud in their praise of the young debutante, who is now ranked as the star of the company. Ordinarily when understudies are too successful they are discharged—an impossibility in this case, for "backers'" reasons.

The following people were engaged to support Miss Letitia Aldrich in Miss Seawell's play, "Maud Mariar," which had its first production at the National Theater, on Thursday afternoon: William F. Clifton, W. F. Burroughs, Charles Jehlinger, Sedley Brown, Ed. Clifford, John A. Holland, Mrs. Sol. Smith, Mrs. Ed. Clifford, Mrs. Marie Madison and Lillian Anderson. The company and production are under the direction of Gustave Frohman.

The dog which appears in a leading part in "A Brass Monkey," docile as he appears in the hands of Miss Flora Walsh, is in reality a pronounced and famous fighter. He has a record for fifteen fights—for prizes, too, in each of which he has come off victor. His present professional engagement forbids him, of course, the pleasures of the ring and such Olympian combats, his only recreation in that line of late being the slaughter of an unfortunate cat, who had rashly ventured beyond the sacred threshold of the stage door.

Herrmann's Theater, New York, is to open in September as a travestie house. The first part of the entertainment to be given will consist of the regulation vaudeville olio, and this will be followed by a musical burlesque on some popular drama or opera. The principals and chorus for the latter part of the entertainment are to be imported from England. Fully $20,000 is to be spent in remodeling the theater. The clothing store now underneath the house is to be torn down to make an entrance twenty-three feet and six inches wide and the front of the theater is to be built in exact imitation of the Eiffel Tower with illuminated landings and revolving lights at the apex.

I suppose Mr. Daly deserves credit for having introduced a lot of social features into his theater. In the first place, he offers a sort of guaranty to his patrons that they will not meet any objectionable people. His matinees are marvels in this respect. There are always two or three detectives in dress coats somewhere about, and fathers know that they can send their daughters to Daly's unattended and leave them in Mr. Daly's care. It's jolly to see the girls wander about the foyer at a matinee. There isn't another theater in the city where they do it. And this calls to mind that the wife of a well known Congressman from the West said to me a few weeks ago: "That before she left home she had received applications from over twenty young ladies of good standing in her State who wanted to go on the stage, and who had an idea that the influence of a Congressman was of great value. When I got to Washington," said this lady, "and met with the wives of other Congressmen, I heard the same story from their lips. They told me that the ordinary young woman of good education and good looks was everywhere in the West stage struck. She desires above all else to get to New York. When she is told that Washington is a political and not a dramatic center, she loses all desire to go there. These girls," continued the narrator, "have pondered over Mary Anderson and other theatrical stars until their heads are turned." All this is corroborative of what New York already knows. There is not an art channel here that is not choked with young women. All an adventurer has to do is to open a school or advertise for actresses and he will have to call on the police to protect him.

Like the draughtsmen of our comic papers our burlesque actors have no apparent understanding of their function, or having understanding they have none of the ability that we are justified in expecting. Our caricaturists lack the genuine burlesque spirit, and so do the actors. The former do not know what satire means, much less how to tinct their work with it. The latter possess neither the skill nor the intelligence that are requisite. They bring from the variety stage their stale gags and horse-play expertness. They have never mastered the rudimentary qualifications of their work. Their efforts are distinguished by shallow patience, yet they foist their vulgar gibes and acrobatic agility upon us with a self-complacency that leads us to suspect them of really believing they are doing the proper thing. And a woman of burlesque! Oh, that endless procession of women with vacious countenances, excruciating voices, big calves, and bounteous display of person! They are not performers, they are exhibitors—exhibitors of bust and leg and gross incompetence. They never do anything, because they cannot. They are content to take off their clothes and parade before us. That is supposed to answer all purposes, and that is what they fondly imagine burlesque was made for. The English burlesques and burlesquers touch an even lower depth of imbecility and incapacity, if such a depth can be pictured. To appreciate this fact it is only necessary to witness the British show that, like the grip, is sojourning with us at present. Here one may realize what it is to be afflicted with a melancholy, beside which an hour spent in the receiving vault at Greenwood would be a cheerful experience. No, the art of burlesque is dead. We have not even the remains.—Dramatic Mirror.

Between Night and Morning in Southwestern England.

Still, still—so still that you might carve,
Like marble in the bed,
Vast blocks of solid silence, from
The night around us spread,
Till steadily glimmering dawn with gray
Dilutes the chaos dark,
And, tuning for the sky his song,
Awakes the woodland lark.

Thou Dawn that silent flood'st the vale,
Will flood the vale with song,
As open'd beak and fluttering wing
In their green nurseries throng.
With those who chant His praise and float
Through Heaven fehir ordered way,
God's little ones of heaven and holt
Their angel service pay.

Now o'er the bay a second sea
Of liquid amber swims;
Each grove now to the gracious light
Breaks forth in thankful hymns;
With jocund cry the blackbird trim
Leaps on the dewy lawn.
O snow soft silence of the night:
O music of the dawn!

How to Ask Your Druggist for It.

Munsey's Weekly.

A word that is in every one's mouth at the present time is more generally mispronounced on Manhattan Island than any other. "Keneen" or "quineen" is the pronunciation given to the word in question by all classes of New Yorkers. There is no authority for this in Webster, Worcester, or any other English lexicon. According to Webster it should be "quaynyne" or quinyne."

Indeed, a critical friend from Boston told us the other day that bad English is shockingly prevalent in the metropolis, even in circles where Lindley Murray should reign supreme. He said that he heard a well known New York lady say "off of," and went so far as to accuse another of our fellow citizens of remarking "there's nothing into it." This last insinuation, however, we indignantly repel. Such outrages upon decorum as the substitution of "into" for "in" are peculiar to the inhabitants of New Jersey, and are unknown to any civilized country.

An Arab Saying.

Remember, three things come not back:
The arrow sent upon its track—
It will not swerve, it will not stay
Its speed; it flies to wound or slay.

The spoken word, so soon forgot
By thee; but it has perished not;
In other hearts 'tis living still,
And doing work for good or ill.

And the lost opportunity,
That cometh back no more to thee.
In vain thou weepest, in vain dost yearn,
Those three will nevermore return.

ENDURE MUCH PAIN.

Mutilations Which the Lower Animals Will Readily Stand.

In man and animals the skin is certainly the most sensitive tissue of the body, says a writer in the Nineteenth Century. We can hardly imagine that the scales which cover the bodies of fishes are equally sensitive. When we pass to the invertebrate kingdom, represented by shellfish, snails, worms, insects, etc., we find an entire absence of brain, the nervous system being represented by two nervous cords running the whole length of the vernal surface of the body and having a pair of small masses of nervous tissue, known as ganglia, developed at intervals. The extraordinary mutilations these creatures will successfully endure prove that their nervous system is but little influenced by shock, and renders it almost certain that it is equally insensitive to pain. When we remember that the worm when cut in halves does not necessarily die, but has the power of reproducing a new mouth, and becomes a new animal; again, when we remember that other members of the same sub-kingdom, such as lobsters and crabs, will frequently when frightened throw off a limb or two, we must conclude that their sense of pain is very small, and yet they are repeatedly spoken and written of as though they were as sensitive as man.

The nervous system of insects is very similar to that of worms and snails, being represented by a vetral chain of ganglia, and in their case the evidence of insensitiveness would appear to be overwhelming.

Wasps with their bodies crushed out of all shape will readily attack sugar and honey when supplied them as though nothing were the matter. cock chafers, in a similar way, will go on feeding when their abdomens have been partially eviscerated by the peck of a bird, while a beetle with a pin through its body has been known to perambulate the collector's case in which it has been placed and devour all the other specimens in the neighborhood. Again, as we watch a moth hovering round an open light, and see its wings and body from time to time singed by the heat, it must strike us that were it more sensitive to pain its life would be preserved.

Smile Again on Me!

sighed Tom to his beloved. He knew not what gave her such a charm in his eyes. Her teeth, preserved by SOZODONT which she had used from girlhood, did his business. She held her lover by virtue of SOZODONT.
